THE MANOR

Though ideals differ with individuals, though their particular interests dictate variety, though personal faults destroy intended execution—all men have ideals. Education, instruction, and initiative are the elements we use to develop these ideals. To master these elements properly it is important that man learn to recognize his limitations. This awareness proposes to him his first opportunity of overcoming his weaknesses.

The freshman enters college in autumn, the season when disrobing nature casts aside her adornments. The barks of trees stand naked and cold, no longer embellished by the clustered leaves. Alone the bare essentials remain, stolid in a silhouette of nature's grandeur. The student too, within himself, experiences this stripping away. He learns to evaluate his ideas and to discipline his judgments. To accomplish this, there must follow a time of intellectual searching and a tasting of many valuable subjects. His mind must purge itself of its ornaments.

In winter the snow protects the barrenness of the earth. Birds flee their cold habitations, animals seek shelter; each species adjusts according to its needs. The winter of the student is more than a three month period. It is college in all its facets of books, theories, and surveys. He is cloistered in scholarship, preserving his remaining barrenness and preparing for an expansion of thought. To unite his narrow world with the vaster world of all creation is his vocation. As the new semesters succeed the old he discovers a greater consciousness in his thinking.

This season also terminates. The snow melts. Green blades of grass begin to spot the brown ground. The day of graduation nears and the student begins to bud into his intellectual spring. Behind him is a world of essentials from which he is now able to draw sources and reasons for his thinking and judgments. His former attempts lead to Commencement, the spring of his future and the beginning of his new strivings. He must now utilize his preparations, apply them to all things, smooth their ragged edges, perform the things prepared.

So from the planting of this springtime he comes at length into the bloom and burgeoning of summer, into the further autumns of his harvest. And so begins again the eternal cycle, the abundant wheel, the circling of the seasons unto the circling of the stars.

And in the center of this ring, in the midst of the enfoliate rose, may he come at length to the One about Whom all the circling of the seasons and the hours, all the orbiting of the planets, all the widening choirs of the angelic hosts, do equally revolve.

As the minutes, the hours, and the days cycled continuously during our college careers, many transformations gained way into our microcosms. We chose Fairfield to be the screen to strain from our lives the superfluous and replace it with the essential. The success of this development depended upon the careful tutelage of our instructors.

To one of these men, whose talent and devotion has assisted in carefully weaving our webs, by which we can capture our objectives, the Senior class of 1960 dedicates The Manor.

A Jesuit, scholar, poet, author, professor, and penologist, John Louis Bonn, S.J. is one of Fairfield's filterers. Through him, we have learned to synthesize philosophy with aesthetics, to approach scholarship objectively, and to gain a consciousness of ourselves and our judgments. From his assistance, ample opportunity arose to unveil our latent talents.

We hope some day to be worthy of his efforts.

It is a strange, enchanting melody for man: the call to truth.

In time's first light we find him etching reality on the walls of his cave-home. We follow him: plotting the course of the sun, speculating on the nature of his world, carving his gods in deathless, lifeless stone.

For a time he is a Greek, drawing his universe in the sand of the agora. Then he is a Roman, surveying a calm and tranquil world pacified by his legions, from his tranquil stoa.

Suddenly he becomes another Man, suffering in the eyes of a hostile world, on a cross of suffering, his own choosing; this Man: the Way, the Life, the Truth.

From his lips we hear a promise that gives birth to hope and banishes despair. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Speculating man will never change. His questions are the same today. They will be the same tomorrow. Amid denial and reproof, assurance and concurrence, each man takes up his search, carries it a bit further, then lays it down, a bit farther from its origin, a bit nearer the goal.

Fairfield presents the Aristotelian-Thomistic synthesis as its method, logic as a criterion, for gaining a knowledge of God, man, and the universe. It teaches respect for the thoughts of other men. Its students are given ample time to learn and to speculate in the world of ideas, a distinguishing feature of the Jesuit university.

Life presents a choice: that men neglect the pursuit, bind shut their minds and see fit to content themselves with dwelling on the world's veneer; or that they give themselves to seeking the difficult, all-but-unattainable knowledge of things as they are. For there alone is peace granted, and the freedom that is human.

Aquinas Academy

Richard Cunningham, President Donald Buckley, Moderator Fr. Donoghue, Anthony Sarlo, and Paul Ziegler.

Standing: P. Pestillo, J. Monahan, R. Cunningham, D. Buckley, J. Moylan, A. Catalano, A. Sarlo, R. Brunner, D. Genga. Seated: R. Martin, T. Ryan, Fr. Donoghue, P. Ziegler.

The Aquinas Academy was founded on campus in October, 1953, as a philosophical research and discussion group. The Academy, primarily concerned with augmenting the student's knowledge of Scholastic Philosophy, is founded on the principle of student participation and inquiry in the pursuit of philosophical tenets. In view of the Academy's purpose as an active research group, membership is restricted by invitation of the moderator, Father John D. Donoghue, S.J., in consultation with the dean of studies, to those students who have proven ability and have shown particular proficiency and interest in philosophy. Invitations which were formerly restricted to seniors have been extended this year to juniors, sophomores, and some freshmen, because of recent changes in the philosophy curriculum.

The Academy, from its emergence on the University scene, has traditionally given record of the year's philosophical inquiry in a public dissertation on some aspect of Scholastic Philosophy. Its efforts were displayed on March 7, the feast of St. Thomas Aquinas.

This year the results of the Academy's research in Scholastic Psychology found public discussion in a symposium which treated the basic distinction between Cartesian and Scholastic Psychology. Earlier in the year, Academy president Donald Buckley officiated with the members at an informal panel discussion on the principles of Scholastic Philosophical Psychology given for the Aquinas Club of Danbury state Teacher's College. The remainder of the Academy's agenda was taken by informal discussions on certain principles of Scholastic Metaphysics.

Canisius Academy

Rev. Edmund J. Hogan, S.J., Moderator.

The Canisius Academy is a theology academy whose purpose, as stated in its Constitution, is "to provide the more able students with an opportunity to broaden and deepen the knowledge of theology already gained in the classroom, through added lectures, discussions, and personal research of a scholarly nature." Academy meetings are held bi-weekly, and last about an hour and a half. Membership is by invitation, and is restricted to those students whose name has appeared on the Dean's List at least once. Others may gain admittance only by submitting their name to a vote of the entire Academy. Moreover, the student's marks must remain at a high level in order to retain membership.

In keeping with its purpose as stated above, each year the Academy, under its moderator, Father Edmund Hogan, S.J., chooses a general topic of present theological importance and interest. A good portion of each meeting is devoted to lectures and discussions on this topic. In addition, each individual member chooses a topic of particular interest to himself, and does private research in it under the guidance of the moderator. One of the highlights of the Academy's program is the presentation of a symposium to the Senior Class on April 27th, the feast of its patron, St. Peter Canisius.

humanities

Rev. John W. Ryan, S.J.
Chairman, Department of English
Professor of English

Let us seek a description of the humanities from its manifestations. To undergo the highest form of intellectual endeavor, whereby we use the conscious activities of intellect and will, is the purpose of the humanities. To complete our description we must consider the object toward which our intellect and will are directed. This object must be man, as a being with a body animated by a Soul—and his relations to God and to other men. The human heart, in the isolating studies of the physiologist, the water vascular system, nuclear-physics—these are not the direct concern of the humanities. The real issue for the humanist is the change wrought by the sciences in the everyday life of man.

Through the liberal arts which include and integrate all sciences, we are in direct contact with humanities. They offer a foundation for all higher processes of thinking. To comprehend ideas fully and to develop a means of expressing them is the task of the student. Literature is the most concrete liberal art for studying the humanist's life sights. The poet and dramatist devote themselves to a mastery of their crafts, thus creating modes of expression. A writer's main tool is words, the grouping of which pursues creation. In poetry the most sublime thoughts are relayed with their corresponding musical moods and rhythms. The drama uses men on stage to relate the tales of men. In all the literary forms men are portrayed in some concrete backdrop to express life and to appeal universally.

In addition to the liberal arts, we come in direct contact with the humanities through the fine arts. Here the main tool is not words. This absence is supplied by communicating the lofty feelings of men through musical instruments, the voice, bulk materials, paints, and the dance. The resonance of a vast symphony orchestra, the disciplined range of an opera star, the colors of the Venetian artists, and the graceful arrangements of ballet are forms of expression re-creating the world of man within and without himself.

The quintessence of a rock, a majestic sea, a plant, an animal—the complexity of man and the simplicity of the angels and the Almighty are the bride and bridegroom of humanism.

The Manor

Rev. John W. Ryan, S.J., Moderator.

There's an ancient limerick that begins: An odde little worke is ye yearbooke . . . This maxim need not be finished. It speaks for itself.

Such a work must sum up, in as light a mood as possible, four very important years in the lives of scores of young men. It is immediately open to criticism on two counts: it is too heavy; it is too light. You can now surmise how "odde" the "worke."

There was much fear and trembling on campus when it was learned Ed ("he writes obituaries") Rizy was appointed editor. Let it be said for a time a red cover was considered for the book; but, with the common good in mind, the idea was finally buri . . . discarded. Dino Genga was chosen coordinator of the combined efforts. He seems the executive type anyway, driving a Cadillac and all that.

Tony Giordano assumed the post of literary editor. His experience as editor of Brooklyn Prep's yearbook helped considerably to map out and execute the year's program. He was also well prepared at Fairfield for the job, having served as Junior Class president.

During the initial planning

Incidentally, he and Ralph Burke, layout editor, were voted Most Angry Young Men of 1960. Ralph is still in the Manor office this minute, scribbling down figures and counting off squares on huge sheets of layout paper.

The business staff of Don Theriault, Bob Stubbs, Fred Cahill, and Associates is still looking for a shoebox full of patron returns and ten dollar bills last seen under the front seat of a '48 Chevy (Don's) in October. Our campus police force is working on the case.

Bill O'Brien and Dodd Reichelt, our photography editors, are still the most popular men on our photogenic campus, although Dodd hasn't any film and Bill hasn't any camera.

Bill Curley and Marty Dee, Manor artists, were wreathed in leis for their outstanding efforts. The rest of the staff, those who filled the breeches in the lines along the way, regardless of the merit of the book, are the real heroes of the day.

The Stag

Bill Kramer hands the Sports Editorship to Tom Ungerland.

Lou Parent receives the Managing Editorship from Bob O'Neil.

The Stag is the campus newspaper published on alternate Fridays during the school year by the students of Fairfield University.

Its purpose was defined by the editorial staff of this year as the biweekly, informing, crusading, and entertaining organ of the student body.

During the publication year, the importance of quality was stressed while the quantity varied from six to ten-page editions. A parallelism was made between the intellectual growth of the University and a publication which would be 'au courant' with this growth.

In order to become more cognizant of college trends in journalism, The Stag increased its intercollegiate exchange from some seventy-five regional institutions to almost three hundred colleges and universities throughout the nation. The Stag also became a member of the Associated Intercollegiate Press so that the paper would be judged objectively against the other college newspapers.

The Stag's pressroom.

Bill Kramer, Joe McNamara and Bob O'Neill take a last look at the work of senior year.

Pictures and Pictures, but no cheesecake.

The most notable fact that will be remembered by The Stag and its staff during this year of publication was the appearance of an additional Christmas issue. The idea of a weekly edition had always been in the minds of the preceding editors; but on December 10, 1959, this idea showed a glimpse toward reality. Although this was only an experiment to prove such an undertaking could be accomplished in only the thirteenth year of publication, it is still the big move towards the new Stag whose masthead will read: 'The campus newspaper published weekly during the school year by the students of Fairfield University.'

It is to this increase of quality; to this increased notoriety and to this pioneering step in publication that members of the Class '60, Editor-in-Chief Joseph McNamara, Managing Editor Robert O'Neill and Sports Editor William Kramer, gave their valuable time and indispensable assistance.

New Frontiers

Top: Fr. John L. Bonn, S.J., checks copy before publication.

Bottom: Joseph Annunziata passes editor's key to Geoffrey Stokes.

The official magazine of Fairfield University was first published in the Marian Year of 1954 through the efforts of a group of zealous undergraduates and the encouragement of Fr. John L. Bonn, S.J. Interested in the art of writing as well as in the renown of Fairfield University, these men thus provided a "tongue for the thoughts and loves that lie in the minds and hearts of Fairfield men." They also established a standard of quality publication that has given New Frontiers a reputation as one of the top college publications in the nation.

Our magazine is unique in that it appeals to a universal audience, giving vent to an unlimited range of fields—from art, fiction and poetry, to science, philosophy, politics, government, theology, education and sociology; yet its lofty standard of quality remains fixed in its prime position.

This year, New Frontiers has outdone itself in providing even greater enjoyment for its many readers. It has increased its publication from two to three issues per year, and it has formed an art department that rivals the quality writing in the magazine. In each issue, superior art work and stimulating articles by undergraduates, faculty members, graduates, and well-known writers from outside the university have occasioned widespread acclaim for New Frontiers and Fairfield University. Subscriptions are now being received from all parts of the United States, Canada and South America.

Much of the credit for this success goes to the hard work of an elite Staff of gifted undergraduates, among whom the seniors are: Joseph Annunziata, Charles Kennedy, Joseph Monahan, Robert Cancelliere, and William Curley. Yet one must not fail to applaud the guiding genius of Fr. Bonn, S.J. and Mr. Arthur R. Riel, Jr., who, as true moderators, modestly moderate the zeal of these young men.

The future of New Frontiers promises to be great, wide, and glorious. We wish it all possible success!

Staff members soak in the nature of their ways.

Bellarmine Debating Society

During the season of 59-60, the Bellarmine Debating Society proceeded upon a somewhat limited schedule. The major schools debated during the year were Brown, Central Connecticut State College, Harvard, Marymount (Tarrytown-on-Hudson) and Morgan State of Virginia. The varsity team was generally comprised of David Royston, Fred J. Abbate, Geoffrey Stokes and John F. X. Warburton, who also served as president pro-tempore.

Among the promising novice debaters, we find such men of oratory ability as Robert Ritter, Robert Melican, Jack Morrison, Arthur James Mannion, Jr., Brian Gallagher, and Robert Jorlett. In addition, Louis Parent should be mentioned for his noble service and aid to the society.

The Debating Society, in true Jesuit tradition, was one of the major active clubs on campus. Due to the many mental and personal benefits debating affords, and to its moderators, Fr. John D. Donoghue, S.J. and Fr. Oliver E. Nickerson, S. J., many young men had their minds improved this season by the St. Robert Bellarmine Debating Society of Fairfield University.

A. Westerfield, B. Gallagher, R. Jorlett, R. Melican, J. Morrison, D. Royston, Vice-Pres.; J. F. X. Warburton, Pres.; A. Mannion, R. Ritter, F. Abbata, Treas. Not present: G. Stokes, Sec'y.

Guiders and deciders: Edward Kane, Treasurer; William Curley, vice-president; James Masi, secretary; and Joseph Monahan, president.

Fairfield's Men in Red rose to new heights during the 1959-1960 season. The number of concerts exceeded all previous years, and many "premieres" were added to the already long list. The Glee Club began its year by assisting at the dedication ceremonies for the Fairfield University Gymnasium early in December. The Gym was also the scene of the first full concert of the year, presented as part of the Winter Carnival. Later in the season, trips were made for combined concerts with several women's colleges, including St. Joseph's College, Emmanuel College, Albertus Magnus College, the Glee Club of St. Francis Hospital, and the Women's Glee Club of St. John's University.

While the eighty-five man club travelled extensively, the organization did not slight its local devotees. It performed in no less than eleven concerts throughout Connecticut, from Hartford to Stamford, and—literally—back again.

The high-point of the Glee Club season was the Second Annual Catholic Intercollegiate Glee Club Festival, which was staged on Fairfield's campus early in April. Participating were glee clubs of nine eastern Catholic colleges: King's College, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania; LeMoyne College, Syracuse, New York; Providence College, Providence, Rhode Island; Saint John's University, New York, New York; Saint Peter's College, Jersey City, New Jersey; University of Scranton, Scranton, Pennsylvania; Holy Cross College, Worcester, Massachusetts; and Fairfield University. Held on a weekend, the Festival began with a mammoth combined concert at the Klein Memorial in Bridgeport, at which each club performed its best selections, climaxed by a joint performance of selections from Rodgers and Hammerstein's South Pacific. The following morning, Palm Sunday, a Solemn High Mass was celebrated by Very Rev. James E. FitzGerald, S.J., assisted by the glee clubs forming a 400-voice choir. Sunday afternoon, a choral competition between the clubs was held in the Gymnasium. The master of ceremonies was Ed Herlihy, NBC radio personality; contestants were judged by a distinguished board of music experts. Following the competition, the Festival Trophy was presented to the winner at a banquet, held at Loyola Hall.

During the year, the glee club's repertoire reflected, as always, the wide variety of musical taste of both its audience and its own members. Selections ranged from classics by Palestrina, Grieg, and Elgar, to the popular melodies of Irving Berlin and Richard Rodgers. Interspersed with the chorale numbers were the comedy performances of the fourteen-man Campus Minstrels, and close harmony of the Bensonians.

Since its inception twelve years ago, the glee club has flourished under the talented hands of its conductor Simon Harak, and faculty moderator Rev. John P. Murray, S.J. The successful achievements of the '59-'60 season are the direct result of their untiring effort and spirit.

Drama Society

The 'Faithfuls' behind the scenes.

Since its inception in 1956, the Drama Society has offered Fairfield students two things. Members gain experience and a means of expression in some form of production. Non-members enjoy the excellent entertainment presented to them.

Teahouse of the August Moon, Detective Story, and An Enemy of the People were the last three productions attesting to the Society's success.

Moderated by the Rev. Laurence J. Mullen, S.J., directed by Robert G. Emerich, and technically advised by Frank Barrett, the Society's reputation is climbing rapidly.

Duc to the cnormous work required for each production, membership of this organization demands responsibility. The result is nothing short of great thcatre.

St. Cecilia Academy

Monday nights find the members gathered in the Canisius faculty lounge for a few hours of fine music.

The people who are interested in the St. Cecilia Academy are among those who believe that the field of interests loosely grouped under the term "culture" is important and that interest in it should be encouraged among the students of Fairfield University. They and their moderators, Dr. Donald J. Ross and Mr. Walter M. Petry, hope that the St. Cecilia Academy is making some contribution to the realization of this idea.

Classical music, art music, concert music—it may be called many names, are all objectionable for some reason or other. Whatever it may be called, it is an art which is of great interest to many people, and it is the basis of the St. Cecilia Academy's activities.

Each week, a member presents a program of recorded music, which he chooses and introduces with appropriate comments. It may be either the work of a particular composer, or music of any given nation, period, or school; or a certain form of composition. The other members thus have an opportunity to hear music which they might not have heard before, or to hear new interpretations of familiar works, as well as to learn from the information offered in the introductory observations. The Academy has begun to build its own record collection, and hopes to increase it over the years.

LANGUAGES

Rev. Joseph M. Manning, S.J.
Chairman, Department of Classical Languages
Associate Professor of Classical Languages and Theology

Rev. Victor F. Leeber, S.J.
Chairman, Department of Modern Languages
Assistant Professor of Modern Languages

One of the first questions that occupies the mind of a student who has been forced by school requirements to take a foreign language is: WHY? Why should one study a foreign language if he is not interested in it, and especially if it has nothing to do with becoming a doctor, physicist, lawyer or engineer? Evidently, the school has its reasons; it must realize that the study of a foreign language is, if not indispensable, at least universally advantageous. Moreover, in recent years, this realization seems to have dawned upon the whole country, giving birth to a revival of language studies which is no less than phenomenal. More and more courses are given each year; summer schools are crowded; different methods are being tried, such as the direct method, the oral-aural approach, language laboratories, discs and movies; the Government is encouraging language studies through the National Education Defense Act; children in elementary schools are successfully learning foreign languages; and even television is adding its spark to the glory of this brilliant revival!

Yet, the question still remains: "Why study a foreign language?"

First of all, the study of a foreign language is an excellent means of training the mind, since it provokes a discipline and preciseness of thinking which not even the physical sciences can match; for not only must the student grasp a whole new set of signs and symbols for words, along with their intricate relationships, but he must strive to comprehend and distinguish the myriad ideas and nuances which they represent. He must think clearly and judge acutely whether hearing, reading, writing or speaking the new language. He must be able to reason carefully, both by induction and deduction, in order to understand thoroughly the complexities of the foreign grammar and syntax. Besides the abundant practice given to his memory, the student also sharpens his power of analysis, stretches his imagination and cultivates practical judgments of common sense. Reading the great literature of the foreign country improves his literary taste and appreciation as well as his sense of critical evaluation. This training of all the powers of the mind in such an enjoyable and rewarding fashion makes language studies unique in mental discipline.

The study of a foreign language also brings one to a greater appreciation of and facility with his own language. The student gradually realizes the basic structure of his native language by comparing it with the foreign one. There are striking similarities of words, idioms and constructions; yet care must be taken to distinguish cognate deceivers and nuances of meanings. He often discovers the etymology and semantics of native words. Moreover, by fusing the different forms, ideas, images and idioms of the foreign language with his own, the student begins to formulate a unique and captivating style of speaking and writing. It is always interesting to listen to someone who knows of different customs, colorful traditions and quaint settings; and it is often amusing to hear other people's ideas on life, death, travel, work, play, food and love. A whole new storehouse of words and wide foreign experience add a certain flavor, zest and originality to the art of self-expression. It was Goethe who once said: "The man who knows no foreign language knows nothing of his mother tongue."

Probably the greatest benefit of knowing a foreign language is the acquaintance one makes with the literature and culture of its nation. By becoming familiar with the thoughts of its great poets, artists, scientists, philosophers and politicians, one can better understand the country's present thoughts, aspirations, attitudes, trends and factions. The world is too small and involved for anyone to be ignorant of the political, social and religious life of other nations. For government officials, there is a special need to know foreign languages; and the late Mr. Dulles realized this when he said: "It is impossible to understand what is in the minds of other people without understanding their language, and without understanding their language it is impossible to be sure that they understand what is in our minds." Our national security is dependent upon delicate diplomatic relations with foreign countries, and this can only be assured by a thorough knowledge of their languages.

We must not forget the pure enjoyment derived from reading any literature, whether foreign or domestic. The great works of other countries can be read merely for the pleasure and relaxation they afford. These masterpieces of conscious art, like our own, are wonderful diversion from the cares of a busy day and never fail to provide quality entertainment.

Besides the urgent need of language teachers on every level of learning and the many government jobs involving foreign-domestic relations, a foreign language is very important for many careers, such as: lawyer, painter, musician, mathematician, chemist, sculptor, politician, businessman, architect, physicist, anthropologist and writer. The fields of commerce, industry, engineering, personnel work, advertising, research and social work are wide open to men with a good knowledge of foreign languages. Their importance in these professions is shown by the language requirements for entrance into most accredited colleges, the language courses that must be taken in college, and the necessary language credits for acceptance into a graduate school as well as for obtaining a graduate degree.

But, above all, the study of a foreign language helps one to understand the universal nature of man. Greek and Roman literature give us a noble and indispensable portrait from a pagan viewpoint; and men like Dante, Goethe and Shakespeare give equally poignant insights to this mysterious problem. No single person can excuse himself from reading these great geniuses, for always and everywhere they will tell him a great deal about himself and his fellow man. This understanding is precisely what the world needs today: our minds must trample over barriers of ignorance and prejudice and embrace all horizons. Peace can only exist where there is mutual understanding. Just as the Tower of Babel brought dissension to mankind, who knows but that the study of our many languages will bring men to realize that they are blood brothers under a common Father Who has commanded them to love one another?

Language studies give a man a truly liberal education —as liberal as the whole circumference of the globe. The student looks down the centuries and studies man, scattered throughout the world, as he is by nature, by race, and as an individual; he discovers countless ideas, feelings, emotions, tendencies, drives and whims, never exactly the same, yet always somehow basically repetitive. The language student cannot remain narrow-minded, prejudiced or indifferent to the affairs of men; for a foreign language broadens his outlook, deepens his knowledge and love of mankind, and introduces him to new ideas, customs and people. In a word, it prepares him to live as a well-informed, well-adjusted man in a world-wide society. An old French proverb says: "Un homme qui connaît deux langues, en vaut deux"!

Dante Academy

The Dante Academy examines original manuscripts and letters in a special library display.

President Joseph Annunziata, Father Victor Leeber and Charles Lops examine a copy of the Divine Comedy.

In September of 1958, a group of upperclassmen approached the Chairman of the Modern Languages Department, Fr. Victor F. Leeber, S.J., with the proposal that a new club be founded with the general purpose of studying and appreciating the great masterpieces of Italian Literature. This was immediately approved by Fr. Leeber, who went on to suggest that, instead of an ordinary club, they should found an academy of serious students dedicated to the life and works of Dante Alighieri—in particular, his immortal masterpiece, the Divine Comedy. With this quiet beginning, there came into existence the Dante Academy.

Its purpose, then, is "to study and appreciate the masterpiece of world literature, the Divina Comedia, in its various aspects: literary, theological, philosophical and historical." Membership is open to all interested students with or without a background in the Italian language.

Conducted on a seminar basis, the Academy last year studied the Inferno; this year it is undertaking the Purgatorio of the Divine Comedy, and next year it will concentrate on the third part or the Paradisio—after which the three-year cycle will begin again. Each weekly meeting of one hour is divided into a short business session or a lesson in Italian grammar by the Moderator, and a major talk on a selected Canto by a member of the Academy, followed by a period of discussion.

In addition to lectures by each member of the Academy, there are occasional guest lectures who speak on such topics as: "The Historical Background of Dante's Works," and "Milton and Dante." Certain members become engaged in writing special research papers; and, during the year, the Academy as a whole offers a symposium on Dante and his Divine Comedy for the benefit of the student body.

French Club

The French Club: James Tuite, president; J. Tiernan, R. Fleurant, J. Walsh, W. Scully, J. Tellier and J. Annunziata.

The French Club of Fairfield University, following the tradition of a decade of success, conducted its activity during the 1959-1960 school year toward one goal, the establishment of a truly French atmosphere on the campus, thereby enabling the members to acquire more knowledge of French civilization.

The means used to accomplish this objective included movies depicting the scenic countryside of France, guest speakers discussing the contribution of French art and literature to the world, and student research papers presenting outstanding periods in French history. The final activity of the year was an annual banquet held in the Fairfield area, which featured an authority in some aspect of French culture.

The devoted efforts of the club's moderator and the relentlessness of the officers have made this objective a reality at Fairfield University.

Spanish Club

Steve Kolbay, Terry Kiernan and Mr. Guarcello review some pointers before weekly meeting.

A more profound study and understanding of Spanish culture has been created at Fairfield University in the form of the Spanish Club. Although this is one of the University's most recent organizations, the club has enjoyed a very successful year.

At the bi-weekly meetings, guest speakers and student reports provide for the members increased knowledge of Spanish contributions to the Western World. As a means of becoming more proficient in the speaking and understanding of the Spanish language, the club has use of the language laboratory, one of the best-equipped and most modern in the United States. Students record passages on the tape recorder and then play it back, listening for exact pronunciation and accent.

Although the club is in the process of growth, its accomplishments in such a brief period of time have been considerable.

Frank Fillaino, Steve Kolbay, Terry Kiernan, Dick Bolbay, Don Preziozi, Peter Artesian, Bob LaPierre.

German Club

The German Club seeks to stimulate an active interest in various aspects of German life and literature. Members are encouraged to pursue independent research beyond the confines of the classroom. Such research embraces German customs and folklore, as well as the great works of German literature, music, and art.

This year witnessed an increased interest in the club, since the demand for such an organization was greater than in previous years due to the increasing number of students studying German.

Club members publish a monthly newspaper, regularly show German movies, and participate in discussions concerning various facets of German culture.

The monthly newspaper is written entirely by club members. Its purpose is to foster a greater awareness of the richness of German intellectual life and a better understanding of the German people and their way of living.

Assisted by Vice-Pres. Bill Kane and Treasurer Ned Wizneski, Mr. Czamansky delivers a lecture to the members.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

"According to Christian doctrine, Man, endowed with a social nature, is placed here on earth in order that he may spend his life in society, and under an authority ordained by God, that he may develop and evolve to the full all his faculties to the praise and glory of his Creator, and that, by fulfilling faithfully the duties of his station, he may attain to temporal and eternal happiness." Quadragesimo Anno, Pius XI.

The preceding excerpt from Pope Pius XI's Encyclical encompasses the founding principles of the social science program. Because man is, by nature, a social being, and because in our modern society there is a great diversity of ethical principles, knowledge of economics, education, government, and sociology becomes essential for the full development of the Catholic student. United under one course of study are all the social fields with which everyone will have a greater or lesser association throughout life. Once the essentials are known, any one of these fields will provide an area of investigation that will challenge continuously, and afford endless hours of intellectual enjoyment to the most brilliant of persons.

The historian studies the past in order to understand the world in which we are living. He attempts to answer such questions as: How far should the government interfere with business? By what methods should the working class seek to improve its conditions? Should we join with other nations in the effort to prevent war?

As a member of society we associate with one another in order to make our common life more secure and righteous. We establish institutions in order to help accomplish this aim. Governments, political parties, chambers of commerce, churches, and newspapers each grow out of the seeds sown in the past. And just as we cannot understand a man's behavior without knowing what influences have contributed to the formation of his character, so also are we unable to understand our present institutions unless we learn how they came to be what they are. The historian tries to discover how these events help us to understand the world in which we are living.

Rev. William H. Hohmann, S.J.
Chairman, Departments of Sociology and Economics
Associate Professor of Economics

The economist deals with the phenomena of cost and price, savings and investments, and supply and demand. He necessarily makes assumptions about the goals men seek in economic life; and sometimes he questions those assumptions. Furthermore, the economic order is related to and dependent upon many non-economic forces, including government, public opinion, family life, and migration. The economist helps to explore these relations and seeks to discern their significance in industrial stability and change.

Of special interest in the field of the social sciences is the major in education. This program leads to certification for secondary school teaching. In addition to specific courses in the subjects the student wishes to teach, extensive preparation is taken in the fundamentals and techniques of correct teaching. This particular field of study is the broadest in concept, for not only does it include the various social sciences, but it may also include a number of other fields, such as English, languages, and the natural sciences, depending upon the area in which the student wishes to specialize.

The government major is mostly concerned with the study of political science, and traditionally it has had a strong legal and administrative orientation. The analysis of formal government arrangements is difficult and complex, as any student of the legislative process or of administrative hierarchies can testify. In recent years, however, there has been a growing interest among political scientists in exploring all of the factors that influence political and administrative decisions, not merely the legal and official relationships. The political order does not stand alone but is rooted in culture and social organization. These considerations, added to the rapidly increasing importance of political decision for many areas of social life, have stimulated a renewed interest in government.

The sociology major is complementary to the other social sciences. It explores the varieties of group structure and the way they affect political, economical, and historical relationships. Sociologists are not interested in business decisions as such, but they are interested in the social conditions that make certain types of business relations possible. For example, they study the effect of kinship on economic participation in newly industrialized countries, or the effect of internal and external group relations on factory output and morale.

The long-run aim of the social sciences is to discover the basic structure of human society, to identify the main forces that hold groups together or weaken them, and to learn the conditions that transform social life.

The social sciences are selective in their approach; for when we seek to know the world and draw general conclusions about it, we have to be selective. It highlights and illuminates aspects of living that might otherwise be lost in obscure recognition and misunderstanding.

From the social sciences the student receives a better understanding and appreciation of the forces that affect and form our lives and institutions. They help the student to look beyond everyday occurrences to see and generalize about the causes that bring them about.

Education Club

Fr. McPeake, S.J., Moderator, and Gene Epifano, President.

The Education Club is open to all students who are interested in teaching as a career. This club is affiliated with the Student Education Association of Connecticut. Working in cooperation with the students in other teacher training institutions in Connecticut, the club is trying to solve in a democratic way some of the problems of education. This close interaction helps to develop a professional outlook in the future teachers.

The Education Club has sponsored three statewide meetings at Fairfield this year. Of these meetings, two were executive board meetings and one was an intercollegiate "confab." A special program during National Education Week was highlighted by a guest speaker who talked on the problems of beginning teachers. The club also spent a day at Wright Technical School in Stamford, Connecticut, to become acquainted with the workings of a state technical school. With the increase of membership this year a newsletter was inaugurated.

The club has helped its members become more acquainted with their major and with the people with whom they shall one day work. It has been a very rewarding experience for all those who have worked so hard to make the organization successful.

Fred Miller, Treas., Michael Oates, V.P., Gene Epifano, Pres., Henry Pronovost, Rec. Sec., Cliff Marvin, Corres. Sec.

Public Affairs Club

Bill Sangiovanni, Publicity Director; Tom Tierney, Secretary; John Cook, Vice-President; George Tolmie, President.

It is the aim of this organization to promote interest in, and provide information on, contemporary political, social, and economic issues. The club was most active in this regard during 1959-1960, sponsoring informative lectures by leading international personalities.

Besides the sponsoring of lectures, the club aroused a keen interest in public affairs among the student body by their campus "Public Affairs Center". This meeting room was equipped with numerous informative pamphlets and articles which could be used as reference or retained for personal use by the students.

The club is not only interested in furthering among the students an active interest in public affairs, but it also aims to give the collegians the Catholic approach, where applicable to the political, social, and economic issues of our modern society.

Weekly lectures were regular meetings of the year.

St. Ives Guild

The St. Ives Pre-legal Guild is an association of students in the pursuit of a career in the field of law. Two years ago, a group of present alumni thought up the idea and eventually set up a guild in which students who shared a common interest in law could meet together and become better acquainted with the law and preparation for entrance into law school.

The St. Ives Guild meets twice monthly during which time it features speakers on various phases of the field of law. By bringing in speakers the Guild hopes to stimulate interest in the law here at Fairfield not only among the members of the Guild, but also among the entire student body.

When the Guild was started two years ago with the help of Mr. Stephen J. O'Brien, faculty moderator, it was hoped that by inaugurating such a club, students who had a common interest in the field of law could get together and discuss their aims and problems. As many catalogues as could be obtained from the various law schools were collected and placed in the library in Canisius Hall for the use of members. Various speakers were brought in to address the students. Representatives from many law schools were invited to come to the school so that the members of the Guild could discuss their problems and learn about law school life. Students who took the Law School Admission Test discussed the various problems they encountered in taking the exam.

This past year has been even more successful than the previous one, the membership has increased by thirty percent, excellent speakers have been presented, and a dinner climaxed a second successful year.

The Young Democrats

SENIOR OFFICERS: Phil Gallagher, Bob O'Neil and Steve Habetz.

Since its inception a few years ago, the Young Democratic Club of Fairfield University has made great strides towards its primary goal: the stimulation in the student body of an active interest in governmental affairs. Under the direction of their moderators, Dr. John Norman and Rev. William H. Hohmann, S.J., the active participation in the municipal elections in Bridgeport and Fairfield offered the members an opportunity to put into practice the theory of the classroom.

During the course of the year the members were fortunate in having many prominent party leaders address them. Among them were the following: Congressman Donald Irwin, Mayor Samuel Tedesco, First Selectman John Sullivan, Judge Milton Reinhard, and State Senator Norman Hewitt. These enlightening talks enabled the group to become familiar with local, state and national affairs at first hand.

For the first time in its short history, the club emerged as an important part of the state and intercollegiate organizations. With the fifth largest delegation at the last state convention, the Fairfield Club played a leading role on the various committees and was able to secure the election of Stephen Habetz as the college vice-president. On the intercollegiate level, Vincent Carrafiello was elected vice-president of the Connecticut Intercollegiate Young Democrats and Stephen Habetz, treasurer of the New England Intercollegiate Young Democrats.

The Young Republicans

The Fairfield University Young Republican Club was organized during the Presidential election campaign of 1956. The purpose of the organization is to provide a vehicle through which young people who are interested in good government under Republican principles and candidates may become better informed citizens, which will provide a training ground for effective political leadership.

Each year the Young Republican Club extends invitations to Republican politicians to speak on the campus. This past year the Republican Club organized a series of lectures on current national and international topics which was entitled 'Political Forum.' Some of the speakers who lectured were: Meade Alcorne, Senator Prescott Bush, Edward May, State Chairman of the Republican Party, and John Shostak, Mayor of Norwalk.

Off campus, the members of the organization help in municipal, state and national elections. Many members also participate in Republican activities in their respective home towns, not only in the state of Connecticut, but New York, New Jersey, and Massachusetts.

The Young Republican Club is associated with the National Federation of Young Republican Clubs, the Young Republican Clubs of Connecticut, and the Connecticut Collegiate Young Republican Club. These organizations provide many interesting social activities during the year. Since its inception, Fairfield University has had a seat on the Executive Board of the Collegiate group in Connecticut. During the past year William Scully, president of the club, has held the position of State Chairman in Connecticut.

Student Council

On Tuesday evenings, a visitor to Xavier cafeteria, after peering through the billowing clouds of smoke, might be fortunate enough to distinguish the figures of twenty-three students and a faculty moderator. This group comprises the Student Council of Fairfield University.

Composed of eight seniors, six juniors, five sophomores and four freshmen, who are elected by their classmates (with the exception of the presidents of the three upper classes, who are ex officio members), the purpose of the Council is "to exercise all of the functions of student government which are delegated to it by the President of the University." This includes such activities as the chartering and supervising of extra-curricular organizations, the dispensing of Student Association funds to support many of these organizations, the conducting of all student body elections, the handling of blazer sales, sponsoring the annual Mid-Winter Carnival, and serving as an intermediary between the administration and the students.

"On tonight's agenda . . .": The Student Council discusses.

Naturally, to carry out all of these objectives, working capital was required. To insure that this capital would be on hand when needed, the Council, under the very capable leadership of its President, Ernie Garrity, increased the Student Assessment Tax. This increase was accompanied by a more than proportionate increase in the benefits to be received by payment of the tax. The end result was the largest collection of the assessment tax in the history of the school. But our energetic campus politicos did not stop there. By very careful control and management on their part, the Winter Carnival proved to be a tremendous success, both socially and financially. The efficient handling of the blazer sales brought in further gains. Thus the Council was prepared to carry out its duties. This it did in a most proficient manner.

Father John Ryan, S.J., speaker; Fr. Richard Rooney, S.J., moderator.

In addition to these regular obligations the Council took steps in areas never before entered by past student governments. It added an honorable mention list to the Dean's List, organized and supported the new Cardinal Key Society, and made inroads in achieving its ultimate goal—greater interest and participation in the work of the Council by the members of the student body. This latter accomplishment, a herculean feat in itself, was brought about by publishing the minutes of the meetings in the Stag, posting notices inviting the student body to the meetings, and by erecting a Student Council bulletin board, which kept the students informed on all the latest happenings. Thus this year's Council truly represented the student body.

Dave Royston, Vice-Pres.; Tom Ryan, Corr. Sec'y; Bob Michael, Treas.; Ernie Garrity, Pres.; Don Theriault, Rec. Sec'y.

Due to the untiring efforts and sincere dedication of its president and members, and with the invaluable assistance of its moderator, Father Richard L. Rooney, S.J., this year's Student Council gained the respect and admiration of the entire student body, an honor which it richly deserved for a job well done.

Standing: W. Sangiovanni, W. Ganim, R. Stubbs, J. Hughes, M. Guglielmo. Seated: P. Ziegler, A. Prisendorf, J. Scanlon, N. Coll, E. Anderson, F. Murphy, T. Ryan, E. Garrity, D. Royston, R. Michael, J. Crane, J. McNamara, D. Shay, J. McCarthy, J. Cannizzarro. Absent: L. Zowine, D. Theriault, J. Collins.

Resident Council

The Resident Council is the youngest governing body in the University. Organized to co-ordinate the activities of the dorm students, it has done much to add to the ever evolving traditions of Fairfield. As a legislative body, the Executive Board of the Council is composed of eleven delegates and four officers elected from the campus dormitories. This board, with the able assistance of its moderator, Rev. John L. Clancy, S.J., acts as a mediator between the dorm students and the administration.

Under the competent leadership of its President, Tom Ryan, the Council has promoted and stimulated spiritual, social, and recreational activities for the dorm students. The Council has handled such matters as providing reading material for the students, securing an on-campus barber, and organizing a bowling league. With the help and advice of the Rev. Joseph McCormick, S.J., Dean of Men, it has produced a commendable record for the year 1959-1960.

Seated: B. Dunn, M. Low, R. Badolato, T. Ryan, Rev. John L. Clancy, S. J., Moderator; J. Doyle, S. Sullivan; Standing: J. O'Brien, T. Clementino, J. Morrison, F. Mastrapasque, J. Cherrytree, B. Purdogil.

A highlight of the Council's social activities was the annual Christmas party with its accompanying decorations, music, entertainment, and movie. The campus block party and dance was the biggest yet.

The Council will continue to grow as the University grows and its importance will increase year after year. The Council is an active organ of student expression and is a credit to Fairfield and the men who comprise it.

NFCCS

The primary and most important objective of the National Federation of Catholic College Students is to help the Catholic colleges to provide in-service training of young Catholic leaders. The resultant fact is that these persons, participating fully in the mentality of the Church, will make a Catholic impression on the community in which they live, on those with whom they work, and on all with whom they come in contact. This training is given because of the need to further the Federation's efforts in Christianizing and coordinating the co-curricular activities on the Catholic college campuses and using these activities along with the academic learning of the students in order to make their Christian ideals live for them and serve them, not only in the future, but now.

The Federation's activities include, in its broadest interpretation, every activity of every campus co-curricula club. However, only when two or more colleges unite their activities in Catholic Action is the united intercollegiate voice of the Federation heard. The student is taught to look beyond his campus through the Federation. He is no longer welded for life to a particular college campus, but he is stimulated through the larger vision that he gets of himself as a member of the Catholic student community to find a place for himself after graduation as a Catholic leader in his community and in the wider world of men.

Our beloved campus has long been building the type of Catholic lay leaders who fulfill the principles of the Federation. Within the past six years, Fairfield University has produced four presidents of the twenty-five colleges in the New England Region. This year has seen the office successfully administered by a member of our graduating class in the person of Donald J. St. John. Serving also in regional offices for this year has been Daniel Comcowich, Family Life Commission Chairman, and Jack Faulkner, Marian Commission Chairman. Representing the campus to the nineteen thousand students of the New England Region has been Paul Ziegler, Senior Delegate; Robert Melican, Junior Delegate; and Michael Hurley as Alternate Delegate.

The National Federation: Fairfield local.

Cardinal Key Society

On November 28, 1959, the Cardinal Key Society was organized by the Student Council Activities Committee and accepted by the Very Rev. James E. Fitzgerald, S.J., president of Fairfield University.

Under the general chairmanship of John Crane, this embryonic society has developed with rapid speed. Its purpose is to foster school spirit and loyalty by directing and sponsoring extra-curricular activities.

The Key has participated in many activities during the year, including the following:

—Dedication of the gymnasium at which the members assisted the faculty by ushering and distributing programs.

—Organizing basketball rallies; two basketball rallies were held before the Holy Cross and the University of Bridgeport games.

—The Key has ushered at every basketball game at home, sold programs, and has aided the Student Council in checking Student Assessment cards.

—The Key has acted as a welcoming committee to visiting athletic teams, dignitaries, and parents of prospective students.

—The Key participated in the Bridgeport area Heart Fund Drive.

—A banquet was held at the end of the year in honor of the senior members of the Key to welcome the newly elected members into the organization.

C I S L

Alex Groves, Convention Chairman; George Lallos, Senior Delegate; Vin Carrafiello, Junior Delegate.

The Connecticut Interstate Student Legislature is one of the many active clubs on campus. Meeting weekly, the members spend the entire year planning for the mock legislature in March. They attend Mock-mock meetings and hold special sessions, learning the many details of parliamentary procedure and the ways in which our State Legislature is run.

Under the capable leadership of George Lallos, Senior Delegate and Vincent Carafiello, Junior Delegate and the able assistance of Fr. William Hohmann, the club moderator, the club once again displayed the skill and intelligence that makes it one of the finest delegations in Connecticut.

This year at Hartford, the club succeeded in electing Donald St. John as Speaker of the House. Besides securing the election of two chairmanships at the convention, the delegation, working as a unit, successfully passed two bills. With fourteen of the delegates returning next year, the C.I.S.L. of Fairfield University can look forward to another great year.

Sociology Club

Certainly, the students of Fairfield University realize that they must learn to associate with their colleagues. One of the purposes of the Sociology Club is to demonstrate this interaction between man and his fellow men by the study of case histories, discussions, illustrated lectures, motion pictures, and guest speakers. Periodic field trips are also undertaken for the purpose of using the community facilities as a social laboratory. The members also study some of the contemporary sociologists, such as Comte, Merton, Bogardus, and Sorokin.

Although the club is one of the newer undergraduate organizations, it contributes to the old adage of a "well rounded college personality."

Norm Fournier, Ed Kane, Dr. Vail, Dodd Reichelt, Dick Ripke.

Marketing Club

The Collegiate Marketing Club of Fairfield University was organized by the students of business administration during the beginning of the fall semester. The club was granted a charter of affiliation by the American Marketing Association in October, 1959. The present group of students represents the charter membership of the club.

The purpose of the club is to promote a general interest in the field of marketing by presenting practical problems which are actually encountered in the business world.

This purpose is achieved by arranging tours through local business establishments and by inviting prominent business executives to speak at the club's business meetings, which are held once a month. One of the outstanding tours took place during the spring semester at the Columbia Records Corporation plant in Bridgeport.

Inasmuch as this is the initial year for the club, a good deal of time and energy has been spent on the part of the officers and the members in organizing the club and writing its constitution.

The Collegiate Marketing Club is considered one of the most important business organizations on the campus. Because of enthusiastic energy on the part of all of its members, the program which the club has developed and presented to the business students has helped to enhance their thinking in the field of marketing, and has given an insight into practical business problems for those who will be engaged in business activities in the near future.

CHARTER PRESENTATION: Peter Hauser, Rec. Sec'y; T. J. F. Pinkman, Moderator; Frank Donino, Vice-Pres., Publicity Chairman; Fr. Healy, Dean of Studies; Bob Monk, Vice-Pres., Membership Chairman; Paul Clauson, Pres.; Wallace Timmany, Treas.; Thomas Fitzpatrick, Chairman of Business Department; Ray Heche, Corres. Sec'y.

Business Club

The purpose of the Business Club is to serve business students of the University by supplementing the theoretical knowledge gained in the classroom with practical application of progressive business methods. Membership is open to all students who have chosen a major field of concentration in accounting, economics, marketing or general business.

Among the activities carried on by the Business Club is an editorial bulletin, "The Advisor," in which students may express their views concerning current business activities. Also prominent among Business Club functions are dinner meetings which prominent businessmen are invited to attend, and business tours which feature trips to various types of manufacturing concerns. As a service to all graduating students, the Business Club has formed a committee which collects data concerning current opportunities for employment. Also, the club has compiled a record of all firms that are currently employing or have employed Fairfield University graduates.

The club's membership has grown continuously through the years, until it now boasts an all-time high of 90 members. The work of incorporating the Business Club is almost over, and, once finished, will allow the club to participate in many more interesting phases of the business world. These additional facets in the organization will, it is hoped, foster an even greater interest in one of the most active clubs on campus.

The Annual Banquet

NATURAL SCIENCE

Rev. William F. Burns, S.J.
Chairman, Departments of Physics and Mathematics
Professor of Physics and Mathematics

Rev. Gerald F. Hutchinson, S.J.
Chairman, Department of Chemistry
Associate Professor of Chemistry

In nature there are no isolated facts, no isolated principles. Each part of the natural science story is linked by indissoluble bonds with that which goes before and that which comes after. As in any other structure, foundation must precede superstructure. The story of the building of this structure is wonderful, fascinating, and beautiful. The developments of the last decades especially have drawn biology (the science of life), physics (the science of matter and motion), and chemistry (the science of the composition of substances and of the transformations which they undergo) more and more closely together. A true fusion of the three into a unity of content could only be achieved by fundamental extensions of our knowledge of the processes of life—presently by a transition of aspects with respect to reality. In our times, radiation becomes a common ground of thought for the biologist, the chemist, and the physicist. The human body itself is the perfect scientific hub. Herein lie ideas instinct with human interest and vital with meaning in the world in which we live today. They are part and parcel of human thought on one hand, and of practical civilization on the other.

"We educate . . . to prepare for the world." When Newman delivered these words to the Catholic University of Ireland, he had all branches of education in mind. The natural sciences, then, pose no exception.

Here at Fairfield, our future men of science are directed and moulded through a liberal arts education that may help to form and make definitive the student's attitude toward problem situations in general, hereby educating "the whole man." As a system, the natural sciences at Fairfield have for their primary aims the firm presentation of the key ideas and theories of the sciences themselves, and the development of intellectual apparatus for the student's orientation in these times where, more than ever, science plays such an important role in the development of our age and its civilization. Analogous to the development of our men of science, one might propose the development of the natural sciences themselves through the ages. From Zoology, General Chemistry, and General Physics, the men proceed with definite, well-directed steps, through a variety of activities such as problems, experiments, reports, journals, and term projects; to Genetics, Organic Chemistry, and Nuclear Physics.

It is most suitable to bring the judgment of moral or immoral to bear not on the science itself but on the men who apply and exploit it. Here we find the basic need for the Catholic college graduate. In the discovery of scientific truth we must be guided by humility, not pride. Keeping this in mind, we can use our natural sciences as a means to international understanding. For science, like music, claims a fundamental element of unity between the thoughts of men scattered about the globe. Scientific observation produces the same intellectual reactions whatever may be the longitude or latitude.

Though we do not look at our science as being on the threshold of understanding the Plan of Creation, we can, with one voice, proclaim the interrelations of the world as a whole with the Will of its Creator.

In Memoriam

The life and work of the Rev. Francis X. Wilkie, S.J. epitomized the ideal of vigilance in a son of Ignatius. A member of the Fairfield faculty since 1948, Father was still teaching within two days of his death. As chairman of the biology department, he was of vital assistance to students applying for Medical school. Thus, after thirty-one years in the Society of Jesus, Father Wilkie ended his successful career.

Mendel Club

Between the third floor and roof of Xavier Hall are situated a host of anatomical curios which are thc sole and perpetual property of the Mendel Club of Fairfield University.

Dedicated to the inculcation of interest in the biological and allied sciences, this club, until recently under the guidance of the Reverend Francis X. Wilkie, S.J., has dispersed to the medical and dental colleges of the United States scores of doctors and dentists-to-be.

Adhering closely to the axiom of learning by sense perception, the scientific schedule consists primarily of lectures by authorities on empirical experience, and also of films on such topics as are of interest particularly to students pursuing scientific curricula. Of course, all work and no play makes John a dull doctor, and as a natural consequence of this thesis the student nurses of a well-known Bridgeport hospital have been invited to share in the revelry of viewing a film on cardiac disease.

Group participation is the hallmark of this organization. Each student is urged to augment the collective knowledge by lecturing on topics of interest to him, or by writing an article for the club paper, The Nucleus.

Several members of this biological body havc assisted or are assisting the mentors of the science departments in research work. In addition to enhancing the student's acquaintance with technical skills, such experiments also provide a most influential "in" with post-graduate schools. Thus the pragmatic advantages of science are not neglected.

This year the club has spared no expenses in achieving a Mendelian "first." Tours of chemical laboratories in the area were scheduled with the hope that such itineraries would advance the participants' appreciation of research chemistry and biology, rather than increase the University's supply of test tubes and Erlenmeyer flasks.

Occupying a prominent position in the social limelight is the biological bacchanal celebrated at the termination of the second semester. At the annual club party, old experiences are rehashed and new plans are formulated.

Math-Physics Club

The Math-Physics Club of Fairfield University (made this year a Student Section of the American Institute of Physics) is a semi-informal gathering of scientists-to-be with the purpose of forming a tighter bond among the members, all of whom have physics as their prime objective. Under the A.I.P., the members are entitled to various privileges such as a free subscription to "Physics Today", a student section pin, the interchange of information between this student section and those of other institutions, placement service, and much more. It is the aim of the club to encourage the study of physics and to develop professional pride and responsibility in those students who elect to become physicists. Here the members strive for the advancement of the diffusion of knowledge of the science of physics and its application to human welfare. The section serves to stimulate an interest in physics and its related fields by such activities as: the showing of films on both the theoretical and developmental aspects of physics and those subjects closely allied to it; tours of scientific industrial firms and laboratories; section projects on one or another phase of physics; and noted lecturers on varied subjects in the world of science. Some of the films shown (accompanied by a lecture given by Lt. Douglas DeCluitt, E. E. of the Fairfield Nike Base) were: "The Nike Missile System," "Crystals: An Introduction," and "Brattain on Semiconductor Physics." The chief projects undertaken for the year were the preparation and forming of a rocket division of the club, headed by Dan Plaskon, and the publication of a quarterly journal of the Math-Physics Club called "Scientia", with Jim Masi as editor-in-chief, assisted by Ron Cappaletti and Stan Macklow and many members of the Club. A group of Sophomores led by Phil Burns and Tom Rose have begun construction of a basic digital computer.

The non-academic functions of the club this year consisted of a social, the annual banquet, and a picnic at the end of the school year.

In all, the '59-'60 year in the Math-Physics Club, under the presidency of James Masi, was an enjoyable, instructive, and interesting one for all who participated.

Chemistry Club

The Chemistry Club offers to the chemistry majors at Fairfield University an opportunity to deal with various aspects of science on a personal but informative level. Activities and discussions are centered about technical papers and demonstrations presented by club members. Subject matter for such papers and discussions varies from the old classical interpretations of physical and chemical phenomena to the most modern theories of present day science. The bi-annual publication of the club's magazine, "The Condenser", provides a further opportunity for club members to express their scientific talents.

In order to keep pace with the changing and growing trends in science, the Chemistry Club included in its roster of activities trips to research and industrial chemical laboratories, and instructive talks by guest lecturers. Such activities as these allowed the students to view science on a level which is beyond the scope of the classroom. Their purpose is to introduce the student to the practical mechanics and problems which are found in both commercial and research industries.

The club takes pleasure in giving the young chemistry hopefuls at Fairfield Prep an insight into the education of chemistry majors. A yearly tour of the laboratories is provided for the "Prepsters" in order to acquaint them with the facilities available at the University.

The final aim of the Chemistry Club is to provide the graduating seniors with the additional practical knowledge and poise necessary to meet the challenge of the competitive world of science.

Features

It is in this section that we try to bring together some of the aspects of spiritual, fraternal and social life as they all existed at Fairfield. These are growing and shall continue to grow for a better future; for a well lit past. As you recall, your spiritual facility was the Sodality, spiritual and fraternal was the Knights of Columbus, fraternal and social here were and are the area clubs and the Veteran's Club. To say a little about these would all be best from an introductory point of view. Wherever we may be, the factors which grace our campus and which have graced it with more than an influence of a few hours have graced our lifetimes with a few hours of occupation and have fulfilled in our lifetimes to now an important portion that lives and shall continue to live. Here it may be only yesterday that we saw them; it is even now and today that we live them and do continue to live them in all their quaint effect and richness which fill us now over the strands of memory and throughout something on the present side of memory, throughout our lives as we live here and now. We see them all now. They were molding factors, enjoyment factors, sense factors, whatever beneficial factors you may; but more than that, they are living within us in one way or another. And, finally, they shall continue to live, now, tomorrow, and the day or the week after that.

Spiritual Life

Sodality of Our Lady

The Rev. Joseph H. Murphy, S.J.
Director

The Sodality of Our Lady of Fairfield seeks to achieve the objectives of every Sodality—self-sanctification of its members, sanctification of others, and the defense of the Church. Under the patronage of Our Blessed Lady, Sodalists strive to lead lives which embrace genuine personal spirituality and an active apostolic program. Rev. Joseph W. Murphy, S.J., is the Sodality Director.

The Sodality's apostolic endeavors are carried out by means of various committees. Some of these committees direct their attention to the student body. Others are concerned with off-campus apostolates.

The distribution of religious pamphlets and collections for the benefit of the foreign missions are Sodality projects. Sodalists sponsor the daily group Rosary and the monthly holy hour in honor of the Sacred Heart.

Sodalists exert an influence in the surrounding area by giving religious instructions to parish youth groups, by assisting the religious program for deaf-mutes sponsored by the Diocese of Bridgeport, and by conducting panel discussions for high school Sodality groups. In addition, the Sodality publishes its own monthly newspaper, the Flos Campi.

This year, delegations of Fairfield Sodalists attended the Second World Sodality Congress held at Seton Hall University, and the Boston Convention of the Lay Apostolate. In November, at Shadowbrook, Sodalists made their yearly closed retreat. Sodalists marked December eighth, the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, with their annual day of recollection. For the first time, Fairfield was the scene of a Sodality convention as Sodalists acted as hosts to their brothers from Holy Cross and Boston College who came to participate in the Tri-College Sodality Conference.

The climax of the year was the solemn reception of candidates and communion breakfast in May. All Sodalists' families were invited to attend. At this time new Sodalists made the act of consecration to Our Lady by which they chose her as their patroness and model in all their efforts to bring themselves and others to a more intimate knowledge of her divine Son.

Spring Senior Retreat

"What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his own soul?"

The most important of the spiritual exercises at Fairfield, the last retreat, is all but hidden by the rush to get ready for Easter vacation and the tension that grows as final exams and graduation come nearer.

Yet, it is still the most important. For, as Father James Healy, S.J., retreatmaster, stressed, soon we will be gone away from the sanctuary of the college calls. Never before had we so needed to be strong.

Religious reading: a necessary retreat discipline.

Ignatian Council

No. 4203

Charity, unity, fraternity and patriotism are their ideals. . . .

On April 11, 1960, merely four years after its foundation, the membership of Ignatian Council, No. 4203, Knights of Columbus, surpassed three hundred and sixty.

During this academic year 1959-1960, two series of degrees were held. With Brother Charles Lops serving as Membership-Insurance Chairman, a record-breaking class of forty-four candidates was initiated in November. During that same month, an enjoyable dance was held for members and their friends under the able chairmanship of Brother Bob Crowley.

Again under the direction of Brother Crowley, along with that of Deputy Grand Knight Ken Dubuc, the traditional K. of C. Post-Prom Party was held January 29th as a part of the Winter Carnival Weekend, socially rated as "the best yet."

One notable project initiated this year has been the publication of the Ignatian Bulletin. Edited by Brother Ted Arnold, ably assisted by Brother Dan Browne and a hard-working staff, the bulletin aims to keep graduated and less active members informed of activities and progress.

A very important part of "Columbianism" here at Fairfield is the Council's spiritual program. Brother Bob Callaghan has served as an outstanding Catholic Activity Chairman. He planned and provided two Corporate Communion Breakfasts, and inspired the Council's participation in the Lenten Devotions and in reciting the Rosary in Loyola Chapel.

Culminating the year's activities was the Annual Council Banquet. At this affair awards and acknowledgements were made by the Grand Knight to the many officers, chairmen, and individual members who always make possible a successful Council Year. The Grand Knight-elect presented his aims and programs for the coming year. A notable speaker addressed the Banquet; and it is hoped that, following the example set this year, an annual presentation of a gift to the University will be a part of these festivities.

SOCIAL # LIFE

Bay State Club

Donald Theriault, secretary; Fred Cahill, vice-president; Rev. Henry Murphy, moderator; Ralph Burke, president.

The Bay State Area Club of Fairfield University was founded four years ago to provide not only mutual enjoyment and social companionship for students of the same geographical origin and interests but also to serve as a means of enhancing the name and fame of Fairfield University in the state of Massachusetts.

In its short history the club's enrollment has increased from a small 16 to a healthy 60. This is most gratifying since the area bounded by the club's charter includes two other Jesuit schools.

Among the well attended activities sponsored by the club were the Christmas and Easter dances, a basketball victory social, and several lectures by prominent people from Massachusetts and other parts of the nation.

The Bay State Area Club has a promising future despite the fact that it covers a larger area per member than any other regional organization in the school. This is due to the overwhelming support given by the members to their new moderator, Rev. Henry Murphy, S.J., and the President, Ralph M. Burke.

Bridgeport Club

Officers convene—Kevin Kavanaugh, corresponding secretary; Bob Wasco, recording secretary; Bob Stubbs, president; William Fitzgibbons, treasurer; and Marc Jasmin, vice-president.

"To promote fraternal ties among its members and to cooperate with the University to the betterment of student relations." This, the purpose and goal of the Bridgeport Area Club, was fully realized during the past school year by its numerous dances, stag nights, and awards to students.

Under the capable leadership of Mr. Kunsch, Moderator, and Robert Stubbs, President, the club functioned very smoothly and efficiently in the performance of its activities.

Activities included: dances at Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter times; stag nights each semester; outstanding player awards at the Holy Cross—University of Bridgeport—Fairfield Basketball games; and gifts to Harry Hyra and his mother on "Harry Hyra Night" at the St. Peter's-Fairfield basketball game.

The Bridgeport Area Club is proud that in a small way through its activities it has made Fairfield University a better place for its students.

"Congratulations, Harry"—President Stubbs and Harry Hyra, who received this year's Bridgeport MVP trophy.

Hartford Club

1960 officers: Joe Mastrangelo, vice-president; Steve Ryan, president; Ned Coll, corresponding secretary; Ed Scully, recording secretary; and Jack Doyle, treasurer.

The Hartford Area Club under the leadership of Steve Ryan numbers seventy-seven in membership. This year the organization has sponsored a welcoming party for freshmen, a Halloween dance, a dance after the Inter-Collegiate Ball, a huge New Year's Eve party, and a party over the Easter vacation. Various summer events, such as beach parties are presently being planned. At the moment this club has the largest treasury of all the area clubs. Contact has been made with the Hartford newspapers in order to publish any noteworthy accomplishments of its members. For the first time, our basketball squad received some coverage in these papers. Both the club and its alumni are helping to sponsor an upcoming Fairfield concert, which shall be held in Hartford.

Metropolitan Club

Under the willing leadership of President Bob Monk, the Met Club this year undertook one of the most ambitious programs on campus.

Beginning in September with the usual welcome for the Freshmen, the club extended a warm hand of greeting to the New Yorkers of the Class of '63.

Early in the year, it was decided to adopt letters of the Greek alphabet. The letters chosen were B A Σ, the first three letters of the Greek word βαοτλέος, which means kingly—in reference to the Empire State.

On December 28, 1959, the Met Club moved into the Jade Room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for the Annual Christmas Reunion Dance. The gala surroundings added to the success of a wonderful evening, and it was truly a night to remember.

The second semester saw such Met Club activities as an on campus mixer, a Met Club sponsored lecture and movie, and the annual post-semester beach party.

Again we owe our sincere thanks to the club's moderator, Fr. Sullivan, S.J., for his generous participation and timely advice.

New Haven Club

George Doyle, Vice-Pres.; Raymond Lemley, Pres.; William Glynn, Sec'y; Gilroy Davidson, Treas.

The New Haven Area Club is one of the largest area clubs on campus. It is composed of undergraduates from New Haven and the surrounding towns of East Haven, West Haven, North Haven, Hamden, Wallingford, Orange and Cheshire.

Under the presidency of Raymond Lemley its major purpose was the setting up and conducting of off-campus activities which brought the undergraduates of the New Haven Area into closer contact. Among these activities the Club sponsored a Dance on Thanksgiving Night and a New Year's Eve Party. The Thanksgiving Dance was started by the Club of 1958 and is now an Annual event. The New Year's Eve Party was inaugurated by the Club of 1951 and is the biggest social event on the Club's calendar.

The New Haven Area Club also works closely with the St. Robert Bellarmine Ladies Guild of New Haven in the presentation of an annual concert by the University Glee Club.

The members of this year's club have all worked very hard to make it, by far, one of the best years in the history of the group. It would be hard to pick out any individual member of the New Haven Area Club for commendation. Each of them has done much in the reshaping of the Club into the outstanding organization that it is today.

New Jersey Club

Jerry O'Keefe, Vice-Pres.; Mike Fratantuno, Treas.; Frank Murphy, Rec. Sec'y; Frank Nash, Corres. Sec'y; Thomas Ryan, Pres.

The New Jersey Area Club was founded in order to give its regional members an organization which would provide them with permanent friendships and an outlet for their social activities.

This year's club, under the guidance of its president Tom Ryan, has developed into one of most active influential Area Clubs in the University. Thru the efforts of its members, the Club has been responsible for attracting many competent students from New Jersey to Fairfield University.

The New Jersey Area Club is very closely knit because of the overwhelming support of its members. This year witnessed the fulfillment of the recruitment drive started last fall, and now the Club ranks among the biggest in the University. The incorporation of its own official seal elegantly displayed on their beer mugs was an Area Club first.

The club's social functions this year included a very successful Stag Party, a Christmas Dance, a Jazz Concert-Picnic and a tremendous Year End Beach Party.

Norwalk Club

NORWALK CLUB OFFICERS: (standing) Richard Trabert, treasurer; Caron Keenan, secretary; (seated) John Fitzgerald, president; Peter Bucciarelli, vice-president.

In 1954 a small band of stalwart lads formed what was to be called the Norwalk Area Club of Fairfield University. Since that time the organization has grown from a handful of students to forty in number.

As set down in the constitution of the club, "the Norwalk Area Club shall exist as a supplement to campus activities of Fairfield University." Its purpose is to provide a useful means for the development of character among the students of the University who reside in Norwalk and its surrounding areas. This is done by religious, civic, and social activities. We of Norwalk feel that these goals have been well met during the past six years, and especially this year.

The "Charlie Brown Club", as we are so loyally named, planned and successfully ran sports nights for football and basketball. These undertakings proved to be quite interesting. Social events were scheduled as often as possible. The familiar stag events were held in the Norwalk K. of C. Hall. At these parties true friendships were made.

All in all, the Norwalk Area Club, though somewhat hampered by a sparse enrollment, has realized progress during the 1959-1960 academic year.

Valley Club

One of the first area clubs to be organized for the purpose of serving the students' interests, insofar as they are compatible with those of the administration and Student Association of Fairfield University, and more specifically to aid, where possible, the Valley student's transition to college life, is the Valley Club. The Club includes those students of the Valley area, comprised of Ansonia, Derby, Shelton, Seymour and the surrounding towns.

The scholastic year was opened by a social given the frosh by their big brothers from the Valley. The Christmas season was heralded by a Christmas Dance which closed the first semester. In following the tradition of being the first area club to sponsor the Glee Club in a concert, the club presented this excellent musical organization in a March concert. The proceeds of this concert have provided a scholarship to a member of the Class of 1964. A post-concert social was given as a climax to an eventful and successful season of the club.

Valley Officers—Robert Garofalo, treasurer; Dodd Reichelt, president; Michael Oates, secretary; and Bob McCarthy, vice-president.

Waterbury Club

Donald J. Rinaldi, treasurer; Charles McWeeney, vice-president; Donald E. Milot, president; John Vaitkus, recording secretary; and William Bragg, corresponding secretary.

The Waterbury Club was first established in 1948. At that time, a group of Waterbury students felt that by setting up such an organization they would be more closely united as students and that from such a group would come a future alumni organization. Although established primarily for social activities and good fellowship, the students immediately realized the great good that could be accomplished in spreading the name and ideals of Fairfield University through this undergraduate club.

Since its beginning, the Waterbury Club has rapidly progressed and has become a close-knit organization. This, of course, is due to the close co-operation between the Club Officers and the hard working members. In the Spring of 1959, Donald E. Milot was elected president of the club for the coming year. His policy was a simple one, namely to keep the students from Waterbury interested in the Club and its functions, and through their activities, to spread the name of Fairfield University.

The first activity for the new president and his officers was the annual senior farewell dance that was held in June, 1959. Returning to school in September, the club sponsored a stag party for the purpose of introducing the incoming freshmen to the rest of the students in the Waterbury area. The next event held by the Club was a Halloween costume party. This function was well attended since it was the first costume party ever to be held in the club's history. During this year, the club also held socials for its members.

The biggest events of the year for the officers and members of the club are the annual Christmas Dance and Glee Club Concert. This year the Waterbury Club Alumni were also invited to the Christmas Dance and this resulted in an enjoyable evening with the undergraduates. The club plans to correspond regularly with its alumni and to keep in touch by inviting them to some of its functions. This year the club presented its eleventh annual Glee Club Concert. The purpose of this concert is to obtain a scholarship for some deserving youth from the Waterbury area. This scholarship is attained through the work of the members of the club in presenting the concert. The total enrollment of the Waterbury Club increases every year, and because of this, we know that Waterbury will always be represented at Fairfield University.

Veterans' Club

In 1954, when the halls and classroom reverberated with the sound of Ex-Government Issue feet and the air was filled with the flash of simultaneous and friendly salutes, a need for an organization of those who were once listed in the echelons of the military, and now were enrolled at the University was prevalent. And so—the Veterans Club was formed.

The genial spirit of its founders prompted them to set the prime function of the club as the perpetuation and advancement of social activities and as an aid for veterans in coping with the unfamiliar rigors of academic life. The recent record in regard to social activities has been impressive. Present members will fondly remember the initiation socials in the fall, and the parting picnics in the spring. However, the most impressive event, which extends its welcome to all the students on the campus, is the Post-Carnival Party. This event was sponsored exclusively by the Vet's Club until last year, when other clubs augmented it with more parties to welcome the increased participation of the Winter Carnival.

This year Mr. Robert O'Neil honored the club by accepting the position as Moderator. Mr. O'Neil, a Navy Veteran, claims the proud possession of the Victory Medal and the Good Conduct Medallion.

In recent years the membership has decreased slightly, due to the fact that there are fewer veterans because of the smaller peacetime armed service enlistment. Nevertheless, the cordial quality of the Veterans Club has remained, due mostly to the eager endeavors to promote convivial social activities which include not only its own members, but also the members of the entire student body.

Dogwood Festival

The lovely smile of Miss Carole Drumm.

In February of 1959, Tony Giordano, Junior Class President, announced the appointment of Ernie Garrity to the position of General Chairman of the 1959 Junior Weekend. Thus began three months of organizing, planning, and unceasing work.

The chairmen for the various events and subsidiary committees were selected. This was followed by the appointment of several members of the junior class to individual committees. The intricate machinery of the Dogwood Festival, as this weekend has come to be known, was now rolling in high gear. Weekly meetings were conducted for the entire committee, while Mr. Garrity held more frequent meetings with the committee chairmen. Preliminary plans were drawn up, improved upon, and put into operation. Finally, through the untiring efforts of general chairman Ernie Garrity, financial chairman Dino Genga, and a most efficient crew of committee chairmen and members, the 1959 Dogwood Festival was now a reality.

The four day "weekend" commenced with a lively stag party on Thursday evening. Those who attended this affair indulged in card playing, group singing, or a general "bull session." The evening was most enjoyable, and refreshments were present in an abundant quantity.

On Friday afternoon a dinner was held for the five girls elected by the student body as finalists in the queen's contest, their escorts, and a group of faculty judges. The fabulously decorated Rose Room of the Stratfield Hotel was the site of the Junior Prom on Friday night. Joe Carroll and his Orchestra provided the music. The high spot of the evening was the crowning of Miss Carole Drumm as the Queen of the Dogwood Festival. At one A.M. strains of "Goodnight, Sweetheart" were heard as the happy throng departed for Woodland Grove and the Post-Prom Party.

The warm spring sun and a refreshing salt air breeze greeted those couples who arrived at Sherwood Island for the informal picnic on Saturday afternoon. Many couples gathered in large groups around those few foresighted individuals who had taken their musical instruments along with them. Soon the depths of Long Island Sound were echoing with songs from the past and present. This did not seem to faze those who chose to catch up on their sleep, while basking in the warm sun. The more energetic type rushed off to the softball diamond. Before long the day's activities and the salt air began to work on the appetites of our happy friends. This need was adequately taken care of by the Festival's caterers, assisted by volunteer chefs (male and female). The next step was Notre Dame High School and the Dramatic Society's very professional production of Detective Story. The evening came to an exciting close with an informal dance at the Knights of Columbus Hall.

Sunday, the final day of the "fabulous festival", featured a Communion Breakfast and an outdoor jazz concert. Doctor John Klimas, of the Biology Department, served as guest speaker at a very nicely prepared breakfast which followed the Ten O'Clock Mass. Stan Rubin and his Tiger Town Five, hailed as one of the finest dixieland bands in the nation, quickly revealed that they were more than deserving of such honors as they played at the first outdoor jazz concert in Fairfield's brief history. Towards the end of the afternoon a brisk wind kicked up and the skies became overcast, but this did not dampen the spirit of the Tiger Town Five nor the enthusiasm of a most appreciative audience.

The picnic added to the life of the weekend.

Mid-Winter Carnival

"A coup de grace, a triumph and a feast."

—And much more, honored critics. Winter Carnival of 1960 was the apex of four wonderful years of Fairfield prom parties. Round the clock schedules, uninterrupted enjoyments, and a careful blending of the spiritual and social elements of Fairfield life are always the qualities of our winter weekends. Carnival 1960 excelled in all three. It was the fullest, the most enjoyable and best planned social event in Fairfield's history, truly the finishing stroke.

The fruits of months of careful planning were finally realized as Carnival Weekend got under way Thursday evening when a large partisan crowd of Fairfielders and their dates filled the gym to cheer "our" Stags on against Georgetown.

Friday evening the wintry setting, a host of elegantly dressed female companions, and the lively company of Fairfield men created an atmosphere of delight at the formal dance. The lilting rhythms of Ronnie Drumm and his orchestra set the musical pace for the evening. At 10:30 the dancing was temporarily halted for the highlight of the Formal, the crowning of the Winter Carnival Queen of 1960, Ginny Burke, in the midst of her beautiful court. Then, on went the dance and the spirit until it was time to bid the Ritz farewell in favor of one of the three traditional post prom parties where again it was the graces of terpsichore.

Sleep was somehow fitted into the agenda but, alas, not for long. By 10:00 A.M. some of our more invincible brothers were already engaging their dates in basketball in the gym. By 2:00 even the weakest were again in the true Fairfield spirit and noisily participating in the Jazz Concert in Berchmann's Hall. In vino veritas was the motto of the afternoon. The great Stan Rubin supplied the song—Jazz like Fairfield had never heard before. But the highlight of the day was the sensational performance of the new and talented Folk Lords, a ballad singing, banjo playing trio who could have encored all afternoon. Later the Dave Robertson combo succeeded Stan Rubin on the bandstand playing "modern swing."

The fun continued Saturday evening in the form of a dinner dance attended by 275 couples. After hours of dancing to the Trinity Collegians, all joined in singing along with the band. Still refusing to yield to fatigue, the couples moved to the Westport Rink for a Midnight Skating Party. The happy couples took leave of the ice from time to time to sing along with banjo and guitar music provided by men from their own ranks.

Sunday, the weekend proceeded on a more serious vein. Mass was offered in Loyola Chapel followed by a Communion breakfast. Father Gallagher addressed the group on the important topic of true conversation. Sunday afternoon provided a restful end to the weekend. The time was mainly spent relaxing in Loyola Lounge or by touring the beautiful and sunny campus. Later the Glee Club entertained with a carefully prepared program of song and novelty acts of the Bensonians and Campus Minstrels.

Thus the weekend was brought to a close. It was our last Winter Carnival and it was the best. Congratulations to Chairman Jack Quinn on a job well done.

Pass the tea, please!

The Red Stags

Words from the coach . . .

Words for each other . . .

Deeds for the foe . . .

December 5, 1959 was a date long awaited by Fairfield students. It marked the opening contest in the new gymnasium and it opened what was to be the most successful basketball campaign in the school's history. The opening game on the schedule was between the oldest Jesuit school in New England and the youngest. A pre-game rally was highlighted by a telegram from the Governor of Connecticut.

An SRO crowd witnessed a most startling thing for the first 20 minutes. The rafters withstood their first shaking and by half time the Stags led 30-29. But soon the Crusaders, who had been tabbed for National ranking in the pre-season polls caught fire and scored twelve points to Fairfield's one in the closing minutes to break the game open and win, 73-54. After a week layoff the Stags met their second Worcester opponent in as many Saturdays, Assumption College, and again tasted defeat, 77-64.

The Stags won their first game when they routed St. Francis College of Brooklyn, 83-59. Their next game, their first away, was against Siena in Albany, New York. Fairfield evened their season record at 2-2, when they easily topped the upstate New Yorkers, 60-48.

With the rest of the student body home for Christmas vacation, the ball players settled down for some hard work. They knew they were better than a .500 ball club and they had two weeks to make themselves into that club.

In their first game of the new year, the Stags met Yeshiva at home. This was the same club that upset Fairfield a year before. They were again looking to be spoilers in the Stag's Tri-State debut. The game was never in doubt as the Stags won handily, 69-64.

But something was missing from their attack. Their defense was superb, but offensively they were weak. Every basket the Stags made was worked for. There were no "easy baskets" which are essential for a winning team. The next game was to bear this out when the Stags lost to Adelphi, 74-64, in Garden City, New York. This game normally would have broken a team. It was a Tri-State league game and the loss jeopardized our chances for the title. To win, we would have to win the remainder of the league games.

However, the Stags bounced back two nights later and turned in one of their best performances of the year when they drubbed Iona, 60-48. Coach Bisacca was a genius in this game as he shuffled his starting line up and came up with a combination zone—man to man defense, which completely baffled the Gaels. The Stags' next opponent was Boston College and they ran into an exceptionally hot club. The Eagle's Bill Donovan, a Sophomore who had been scoring 10 and 12 points all season threw in 25 and continually harassed the Stags with basket after basket. This was one game that would be remembered as an 'if' and 'should have' game after the season.

With exams around the corner, the Stags travelled into Bridgeport for a 'do or die' game as far as the Tri-State League was concerned. Bridgeport was undefeated in league play. They had been murdering the rest of the league, averaging 100 plus per game. Fairfield, with its one fluke loss, was the only one between Bridgeport and the title. The game was either stupendous or deplorable, depending on which side you sat; and it will be forgotten by very few people. For 16 minutes and 32 seconds the Stags played lacklustre ball while the Knights looked like a team that was headed for the title. However, behind by 14 with just 3 minutes, 28 seconds to go, the Stags caught fire, or more accurately, exploded. They closed the gap to 2 with 1:14 left and then tied it up on a steal by Tom O'Brien. Then Bob Jenkens stole the ball and fed it to his fellow sophomore Bill Shin who dribbled down court and threw in a jump shot from 30 feet with 18 seconds remaining, to give the Stags the 75-73 victory. This game was to be the turning point of the season for the Stags' record. From here on it was to be 12-5. In stopping Bridgeport, the Stags held the Knights some 30 points under their league average. The game showed the Stags that they had finally got the break which was lacking in their first games. Their troubles weren't completely over though, as Georgetown handed them a 90-74 defeat in their last game in January. This defeat brought the Stags to a 5-5 season record and they still had not been able to get a win streak going.

Then it came and like so many good things, it all came at once. February was to be the Stags' month. From here on they would be playing every other night and the question was whether this would help or hinder them. We all know that it was not the latter, as we watched them first take visiting Villa Madonna from Covington, Kentucky, 68-65; Fairleigh Dickenson, 78-69; and American International, 67-57, before losing to Upsala, 90-74. Then they started on another streak, dropping Brooklyn, 94-80; C.C.N.Y., 74-58; and L.I.U., 87-59. The L.I.U. game was supposed to be the big hurdle between the Stags and the Tri-State league title but the Blackbirds couldn't even be termed a curbstone when they fell before the Stags. Fairfield's own looked unbeatable that night as they ran up a 40-point bulge by half time. Coach Bisacca unleashed his reserves and they were as hot as his first string in this romp.

St. Peter's was next in line for the high flying Stags and this was the real heartbreaker of the season. Leading by 2 with 20 seconds to go, the Stags saw victory turn to defeat when St. Peter's capitalized on a bad pass and tied it up with 6 seconds remaining. The overtime period saw the Stags suddenly go cold after playing terrific ball all night to lose, 82-71. Even this loss didn't break their spirit as they took their next two, topping Hunter, 62-52, and Southern Connecticut State College, 81-76. They then travelled to Trenton, N. J. to take on Rider College in their final Tri-State test. A win here would clinch a tie with Bridgeport for the title. The Stags won, 70-61, but it was a costly one as Art Crawford, their leading scorer and rebounder, broke his ankle at the beginning of the second half. Fairfield still had to face Bridgeport in a playoff for the Tri-State League Championship and now, without Crawford, this task seemed insurmountable.

A completely revamped offense was unveiled for the second Bridgeport game and they shocked the Knights by trouncing them 94-72. Bobby Jenkens did a masterful job on UB's highly touted Bob Laemel, holding him to a season low of 6 points. This game was to mean nothing however, since the Stags lost the right to be the home team in the playoff, on the flip of a coin. Lady Luck just wouldn't smile on the Stags in their last week of the season.

In their last regular season game, the Stags travelled to Providence to take on the N.I.T. bound Friars. The score shouldn't have been as bad as it was, but the team was looking ahead to the playoff with Bridgeport. The final score was 100-57 and this showed us why Providence ended up in the finals of the New York tournament.

For the 5th time in the season the Stags bounced back from an overwhelming defeat to play like a ball club again. This time they were fighting for the chance at the title. The third Bridgeport game may be the best basketball game ever played in this area. Bridgeport jumped off to a quick lead, only to see the Stags close it just as quickly. Then the Knights again pulled away, piling up a 55-45 half-time advantage. This lead was quickly cut to pieces as Fairfield was a different ballclub in the second half. They tied it up, 68-68, with 14 minutes left and the lead see-sawed from there on. Finally with two minutes left the Stags jumped ahead for the last time to win, 100-94. This win gave the Stags the long awaited Tri-State League title and sent them to Staten Island for the first round of the NCAA Small College Tournament.

The following Friday, Fairfield met Drexel Tech of Philadelphia in the Eastern Regional Championships in the Wagner College gymnasium. The Stags toppled the Middle Atlantic States College Division Champs with ease, 54-44, and advanced to the Eastern finals to meet American University of Washington, D. C. This was to be the last game of the season however, as the overanxious Fairfielders gave American U. their last 9 points from the foul line and lost, 75-74. This game ended the most successful season in the history of Fairfield and the final record of the team stood at 17 wins and 9 losses.

The individual highlights of the season were many. Art Crawford was an ankle away from breaking every individual school record. He averaged 19 points and 20 rebounds per game. With 6 games to play it was certain that he would have surpassed the individual scoring record. As it was, he set a new school rebounding record. For his play, Art was named to the first team in the Tri-State League All Star Team and Honorable Mention on the Catholic All-American Team.

Outside of Art Crawford the credit remains to the team, for each game brought forth a new hero. Against L.I.U. it was Joel Cherrytree, as he played only the first half and very little of the second and scored 23 points on a wide variety of jump shots and driving layups. In the second Bridgeport game it was Captain Harry Hyra who scored 23 and was named "Most Valuable Player" and Joe Flannigan who replaced the injured Crawford and scored 14 points and pulled down 12 rebounds. Against Fairleigh Dickinson, Tom O'Brien scored 19 to pace the Stag attack. Against St. Francis, Billy Shin in his first full varsity game scored 16 points and earned himself a starting berth. Against Providence, Devin Doolen came off the bench to score 8 points in 3 short minutes. Dick Panuzak amazed everyone with his accuracy whenever he was called on. When Vin Alvino got his chance against L.I.U. he completely took over as a ball handler and scored 7 points at the same time. Against Iona, Mike Toughy hit 9 foul shots to help the Stag victory. In the last Bridgeport game no one will ever forget Pat Kelly's remarkable exhibition as he shot 82% from the floor and scored 32 points. Sophomore Bobby Jenkens, who started every game and played almost every minute, wasn't the highest scorer and he wasn't the top rebounder, but he was a vital force in making the Stags a team.

They were a good team. They played well and hard. They always had the backing of their fellow students. Finally, they gave the school its first of what we all hope will be a long line of basketball trophies. Their coach, Mr. George Bisacca, deserves a note of credit for his and their success this year.

The 1959 tennis team was the most successful Fairfield athletic team of the year. Their record was eight wins and one loss and they were second in the Rider College Tournament.

They opened with an easy 9-0 win over New Haven State Teachers College, which gave their opponents some estimate of their power. Then they followed with a 6-3 decision over Holy Cross and a startling 6-3 win over Amherst, one of the best college teams in the East. By now people in collegiate tennis circles were beginning to ask questions about this team from Connecticut. However the dream of an undefeated season was broken when the team lost to the University of Massachusetts, 6-3. The loss didn't phase them in the least as they stormed through their next five opponents, starting with St. Peter's whom they blanked. 9-0, followed by Fairleigh-Dickinson, 8-1, and Montclair State Teachers College, 9-0. Next, they romped arch-rival University of Bridgeport, 9-0, and closed out the season with a win over New Britain State Teachers College, 8-1.

In the Rider College Invitational, an individual post-season tourney, the Stags' brother act, Dennis and John Dowd, were both semi-finalists in the singles and finalists in doubles. Their record gave Fairfield second place in the team standings, just missing first by a fraction of a point.

Since we are going to press before the 1960 season is completed, no one knows what it will produce. Everyone from last year's team is returning except Captain Larry Lessing. This year Dennis Dowd will be the captain of the team and inevitably will be playing in the number one spot. Behind him will be his brother John, followed by Joel Cherrytree, who was a semi-finalist in the Rider Tourney in 1958; Paul Maguire, who can take almost anyone on one of his hot days, Mike Flaherty, Tad Dowd, and Bob Melican.

Rev. James W. Ring, S.J., moderator of the team, stresses that his boys play primarily for fun. Since fun is the essence of sport and winning one of its objectives, it would be safe to say the team certainly fulfilled their objective. The MANOR hopes they have as much "fun" in 1960.

Next stop: New Haven. Did somebody pray for rain?

Golf returned to the Fairfield campus after a three year layoff last year as an informal club and emerged this season as a varsity team with an intercollegiate schedule. The schedule includes St. Peters, Iona, Bridgeport, Southern Connecticut and Holy Cross. They beat St. Peter's in their opening match and lost to Holy Cross. The Stags' home course is the seaside links at Shorehaven Country Club in Norwalk.

Returning from last year's club are Seniors Mike Low and Bill Kramer and Junior Paul DeFazio. Newcomers to the team, but by no means to the sport were Seniors Frank Donino, John Downey and Mike Perowske and Sophomore Gary Ferugia.

Thanks to Father William J. Carr, S.J. the golf season at Fairfield was a great success.

Cross Country

Back to Front: F. Hendricks, F. Connor (Capt.), J. Barry, J. Doyle, S. Sullivan, L. Ockey, P. Gallagher.

Primarily a young team, a respectable season record and high hopes for the future were the characteristics that marked this year's Cross-Country Team as one of the finest to ever don the "Cardinal Red."

Captained by Frank Connor, this squad received the invaluable strength and scoring punch, that was sorely needed in years gone by, from three outstanding sophomores: John Barry, Lou Ockey, and Bob McCarthy. Young and inexperienced, this team posted a three win-three loss record at season's end against the stiffest opposition ever to be met by Fairfield harriers. Even in losing, the Stags were never completely out of the race as shown by the Boston College meet, when the powerful Eagles just edged out the Stags by a score of 27-28.

Among those who have been covering the five mile course every Autumn for the past three years are: Phil Gallagher, Jack Quinn, and Captain Frank Connor. It was the experience of these men plus the determination and physical fitness of the sophomore faction that gave coach Tamoshunas and Fairfield University a season to be remembered and to be proud of.

"When you come into the last lap, take a deep breath, Frank."

Jack Quinn has big lead on B.C. harrier during Cross-Country meet, in the Bay State.

Track

Jack Quinn overtakes a Queens College track man in last lap.

P. Hauser and R. Michaels jog a few laps to get in shape.

The Smiling Irishmen.

Led by co-captains Phil Gallagher and Frank Connor, the Fairfield Track Team has the most powerful array of athletes ever to don the Cardinal Red.

Though mainly young and inexperienced, the team possesses depth and scoring punch. The reason for this assumption is the graduation to the varsity level of last year's strong freshman team. Lou Ockey, John Barry, Bob McCarthy and John Doyle are the main counterparts of this talented squad. These are the men that Coach Tanashunas points to as the key men in the success or failure of the Stag Track season. Having proven themselves already on the varsity cross country level however, their success in this endeavor seems inevitable.

These few, however, are not the only reason for the optimistic attitude of the track fans. In Phil Gallagher, we have the leading scorer in the history of Fairfield track men. He will add many more points to his already record breaking score. Frank Connor is probably the best half-miler ever to take the track for the Stags. Frank proved that point and a few others in competition last year when he scored fifteen points in the final meet of the year. Bill Melhan, the six foot, two hundred-twenty-five-pound Junior from New York, is a sure bet to break the shot put record he set last year and very possibly win first place in that event at the C.T.C. Championships in June.

These are only a few of the reasons why Fairfield should have a very successful season this year and in years to come.

Suspicions confirmed!

R. McCarthy and L. Ockey warm up for a big race.

Jack Riddle tries a few practice throws.

J. Doyle crosses the finish line with some moral support from Jay Simpson.

Baseball

A scene rarely duplicated on Alumni Field.

"Safe!"

"Okay, Gang, Let's get out there and Hustle."

In the spring, a young man's fancy turns to baseball, and there is no exception on the Fairfield campus. Last year's team, comprised mostly of Sophomores and Juniors, are returning eight of the starting nine for this season. In 1959's graduation, Fairfield lost only three men.

In his third year as Fairfield baseball coach, Frank Feroletto has been working overtime to make 1960 a successful season.

Seniors Vin Ciminera, Kevin Walsh, Don Rinaldi and Vin Alvino are the veteran keystones of the team. Junior standouts Jack Bruzas, Dick Loungo and Butch Tracy are adding the extra power so sorely needed in past years.

The one weak part of the Stags lineup is the pitching department. Dick Panuczak, number one hurler for Fairfield, is as fine a pitcher as can be found in collegiate ball, but his mound mates are green and still untested in college competition. If, however, Sophomores Dick Badolato and Jim O'Connor can come through, along with some strong relief work from Jack Bruzas and Vin Ciminera, the Stags could be in fine shape, pitching-wise.

Among the standouts in the fielding department, Coach Feroletto is looking for Paul Timko and Bill Schumann to play some outstanding ball in their first year on the squad. If the team runs true to form, the Stags could very likely turn in the best season record of any Fairfield squad.

Class History

Looking back over four years of college, a new version of an old adage comes to mind: the collegian is father to the man. In four years of living as a college student, one can find the contrasts, the excitement, and the activity of a lifetime. The most important fruits of these years will not come, we know, from a diploma, but from what it stands for: the formative experience—intellectual, spiritual, social and recreational—we have gained at Fairfield.

College life, so full of every kind of memory, encloses within its own microcosm every single one of Shakespeare's seven ages of man—if not exactly in the same manner the Bard envisioned them. For who would deny the optimism of infancy we brought with us that day when the juniors in the bright red jackets carried our bags to our rooms, or directed us from office to office: it was the first day of a new life—ours as Fairfield men. We were two hundred and sixty-five strong; and only a few have weakened since then.

Soon the first age gave way to the second, "the whining schoolboy." But we knew Will would have been on our side, too, after Mr. D's world-famous first test. Somehow, we survived; and at last we seemed to be on the inside. Early in the fall, we chose our representatives to the Student Council: Harry Hyra, Bob Lyons, Tom Ryan, and Tony Vitarelli. As Thanksgiving neared, socializing in the college set became a new interest. On the intellectual side, we watched, in the pages of the Stag, the vehement controversy over Latin requirements for the A.B. degree—some with sympathy, others with hope. Christmas came and went; all we needed from Santa then was the strength to get past our first encounter with mid-year exams.

And voila! we were back, still in the fray and with our first Dean's List proudly proclaiming Ray Martin, Tom Martone, Tony Sarlo, Chet Skapczynski, Bob Stubbs, and Dieter Wilkins as class heroes. With the coming of the Winter Carnival, another of Shakespeare's ages became apparent—the romantic "lover" . . . well, a good time was had by all, anyhow; especially by Kevin Bergen, who became King of the Carnival, when his date was chosen Queen.

In the extracurricular clubs on campus, the Class of '60 was well represented. The Stag was favored with the talents of Ed Rizy, Walter Morris, and Mike Wolcott. The Math-Physics Club claimed the talents of Al Spencer, Raphael Luis San Miguel, John Libuha, and Bob and Dick Stubbs. And the brand new St. Cecilia's Academy boasted of Chet Skapczynski and Joe Monahan as charter members. The Sodality also worked long and admirably on the Shadowbrook drive, with the knowledge that it was planning for Fairfield's own future by doing so.

Sports claimed many of our class that first year, too. Freshman basketball enlisted the talents of Harry Hyra, Vinnie Alvino, Pat Kelly, John Gibbons, Rich Ripke, Bob Lyons, Joe Flannigan, Ned Murtagh, and Joel Cherrytree. With the approach of spring, the new Freshman tennis team was manned by such stars as Denny Dowd, Paul Maguire, Joel Cherrytree, and Tad Dowd. Other sportsmen were awed, too, by the fishing exploits of our librarian, Father Small, who presented visible proof of his talents at angling.

Our talents at study, too, were being tried as the end of the year approached amid a whirlwind of dances and social events. The Dramatic Society presented The Caine Mutiny Court Martial at Stratford. Our first election for class officers was held; and as office-holders for Sophomore year we chose Bob Lyons, president; Joe McNamara, vice-president; John Fleming, secretary, and Ernie Garrity, treasurer. Finals were upon us in no time; and soon the sound and fury of Freshman year was no more.

Our second September brought most of us back to the rolling campus; and we found that it, as well as we, had changed. Two new buildings had arisen, dedicated to Jesuit saints: Gonzaga Hall, a new dormitory, also housing our version of the Loew's Poli; and Canisius Hall, where we were destined to spend our class hours. Loyola remained the home of most of us; but we found a new and quiet spirit in the office (and sometimes around the corner). We soon settled down to class, our heads spinning with cyclic views of Redemption, history, and the plays of Shakespeare. A spell of the Asian flu brought many of us to the Loyola Infirmary, where our own Nightingale, Miss Mary Frances Kirk, R.N., worked long and tirelessly to keep classes populated with students as well as teachers.

We found ourselves members of Shakespeare's next age, the "soldier." On the sports field, the class of 1960 provided many warriors. John Fleming, Dick Rochford, Phil Gallagher, and John Crane wore the red letters for track; and medals for bravery in intramural football were pinned to Tad Dowd and Joe McNamara. In more intellectual combat, we were ably represented by Kevin Bergen and Bill Grant in the Debating Society; Steve Ryan became junior delegate to the Connecticut Intercollegiate Student Legislature; and Frank Donino took the post of publicity director for the Business Club.

The Harvest Hop gave way to Christmas festivities, including a Gala Banquet, with entertainment by such greats as George Atwater, Bill Curley, Fairfield's own Charles Laughton, and even a road company of "My Fair Staggy." A last dive at the books was climaxed with the mid-years; and a Mid-Winter Carnival with snow galore gave us an extended break.

Second semester began with advertisements for a green island in the south Atlantic which became the goal of many of us. But blackboards and textbooks proved necessarily more alluring—for the moment. The Glee Club at this time was marching about New England, singing the praises of Jerome Kern and the King of Siam. Charlie Kennedy was mystifying us with his enigmatic but delightful stories in New Frontiers. All sports enthusiasts were pleased at the announcement that the construction of the Gym was soon to begin.

Other warriors during Sophomore year were: Ray Martin, Fred Miller, and Paul Cervoni in the Sodality; Dino Genga, Harry Hyra, Bob Lyons, and Frank Pezzlo on the Student Council; and Tom Ryan and Paul Ziegler on the Resident Council. The battle-field also provided a background for the Drama Society's production of Time Limit!, which was well received at the Stratford Shakespeare Festival Theatre. Elections were held for officers for the Junior Class: Tony Giordano became president; Steve Ryan, vice-president; Frank Connor, secretary, and Phil Gallagher, treasurer. Dino Genga was elected Grand Knight of the Ignatian Council of the Knights of Columbus.

Before we knew it, warm breezes brought us beachward; but finals beckoned, too. It was a satisfying experience to look up from that last bluebook to a bluer sky and know that half our college days were past.

Still, there was the feeling that "the best was yet to be," as the parking lots began to fill up, the following September. Some of us had arrived early to take part in Freshman Orientation Week. Among those to be seen directing our younger brethren were: Nick Bauer, Ray Lemley, Jack Parsons, and Al Brumond. With the advent of our career as philosophers, we found ourselves, like Shakespeare's justice, "full of wise saws," which sometimes were expressed as the names of dancing girls or universal affirmative propositions regarding the redness of noses. To be sure, our courtship with philosophy was a whirlwind one; and by Thanksgiving, betrothal had given way to what appeared to a chosen few as a shot-gun wedding. In any case, the Honeymoon (and the Logic Specimen) was over (Dan Stokes won the pool); and we turned to the "science of true thought"—as that old hillbilly song goes.

At the same time, extracurriculars were in their usual state of feverish activity. Jack Quinn was surprising us with his track successes; and the golf team, too, with players Bill Kramer, Frank Donino, Mike Richards, John Downey, and Mike Low, was establishing an impressive record. The Drama Society was planning a double-bill for the year: a fall production and a spring production. John Patrick's army comedy The Teahouse of the August Moon, a lavish spectacle, was presented at Notre Dame High, with Neil McAneny, Marty Dee, Don Butzco, and Larry Laitres contributing their efforts to a memorable production.

On our way to classes, we all had the chance to be "sidewalk superintendents," as the mammoth arches for the gym were being set in place. Winter was fast approaching, and with it mid-years; but by this time, the Winter Carnival came first in the order of anticipation.

Once second semester had begun, the first hints of approaching graduation—still a year and a half away—were seen. Ed Rizy was appointed editor of the Manor, with Dino Genga, Tony Giordano, Bill O'Brien, Bill Curley, Ralph Burke, Bob Stubbs, Don Theriault, and Fred Cahill as his staff. The Stag, too, received its senior editors, Joe McNamara and Bob O'Neil; Dodd Reichelt and Bill Curley were also on the staff.

During the winter, being and existing bodies, things we had known about all along, were being obscured under the aspects of act and potency, to the delight of all concerned; well, nearly all. After Easter vacation, and another Bermuda excursion, the approach of spring brought the baseball team out in force, with its key men from the class of '60, Don Rinaldi, Tom Shea, Vin Ciminera, and Kevin Walsh. We were honored once again to have the President of the New England Region of the NFCCS on the campus in the person of Don St. John.

Ernie Garrity did an admirable job as chairman of the Dogwood Festival, which was highlighted by the Drama Society's second effort of the year. It had seemed that Teahouse had been the ultimate, but it was easily surpassed by the thoroughly professional presentation of Sidney Kingsley's Detective Story. We were proud to have George Lallos in a leading role.

Just before finals, and the visitation of our oral examiners from Weston, elections for Senior Class Officers were held, with Tony Prisendorf, Bob O'Neil, Joe Monahan, and Marty Dee chosen to lead us in our final year at Fairfield.

In the final stages of life, Shakespeare saw man as a "lean and slippered pantaloon," older, wiser, and, to a degree, "on the way out." We prayed we were any and all of these at our last Mass of the Holy Spirit back in September of 1959. It was to be a momentous year in many ways. A new assistant Dean of Men joined us. With him, and in many respects because of him, the brand-new gymnasium became a lively member of our campus family of buildings. Bishop Shehan baptized it, along with Canisius and Gonzaga, early in December; and because of its youth we forgave it for that first game with our rivals from Worcester.

Another "first" was the foundation of Cardinal Key Society, which numbered among its senior members Dave Kmetz, Bob Eisel, John Reid, Ed Donovan, Andy Broughel, and Larry Crane. In class, "agere sequitur esse" and "say there, Immanuel Kant" became watchwords. Major studies took on new importance as graduate school entrance exams loomed in the distance.

Seniors topped the list of officers in most activities. Joe Moylan was prefect of the Sodality, ably assisted by Ray Martin and Tom Drohan. Dan Comcowich and Tom Gallagher worked hard on the Family Life Commission of the NFCCS. The Resident Student Council was headed by president Tom Ryan. Joe Monahan, Bill Curley, and Jim Masi commandered the Glee Club, with other senior members Dick Smith, George Rouleau, Bob Wasco, George McKeever, and Mike Nespole. New Frontiers began to accept articles by those outside the University during the editorship of Joe Annunziata.

During December, Loyola and Gonzaga were decked out in the usual Christmas trimmings; and, through the intercession of the Apostolic Delegate to the United States (who says you can't fight City Hall?), we were allowed to go home early to help Uncle Sam get the Christmas mails through on time.

After a tough bout with the mid-years, through which most of us survived, we once again enjoyed the traditional Winter Carnival. Jack Quinn was the Sherman Billingsley of the week-end; and a rouser it was, too. Few will forget the tremendous variety-show and jazz concert, headed by Stan Rubin and his Tigertown Five, or the sumptuous dinner-dance at the handsome Holy Trinity Hall.

During the second semester, the Aquinas Academy, headed by Don Buckley, presented a symposium on philosophical psychology and Descartes. Captain Harry Hyra and seniors Tom O'Brien, Joe Flannigan, Pat Kelly, Van Alvino, and Joel Cherrytree led the basketball team on to glory. A very successful Bermuda trip was enjoyed by many of our number. And early in April, the Glee Club played host to the Second Annual Catholic Intercollegiate Glee Club Festival. Two marvelous concerts, with nine glee clubs participating, brought a wealth of choral singing to the campus.

As graduation neared, serious study was the order of the day; and we prepared for a climactic encounter with exams and orals. Worrying and working over, we finished exams; and then we turned to relaxation amid the revelry of Senior Week.

. . . Thus it was that we traversed the seven ages of man in four years. In cap and gown, diploma in hand, we posed for parental snapshots after graduation. But it was clear to us then, in what Shakespeare would also have called a "second childhood," that without Fairfield University we would indeed be

Honor Society

It could well be said that the members of the class of 1960 who were appointed by the President of the University to membership in the Fairfield University Honor Society not only came to Fairfield, but arrived. They are the seniors who have combined scholastic excellence with distinguished participation in extra-curricular activities. Membership in the society is one of the highest accolades that the University awards to its distinguished undergraduates, reflecting the respect of students and faculty alike.

In establishing the Society, the University gives the student added inducement for academic achievement, and encourages greater interest in extra-curricular activities. Requirements for membership are clearly specified as to scholastic average and activity points and, in addition, the eligible seniors must be recommended by the Dean.

From the Editor

A yearbook is never the work of one man,
but rather of many men, all working toward one goal.
Consequently, the laudatory remarks that follow its issuance flow not to the one but to the many.

At times the work had been quite involved.
It seemed never to settle down to the routine of a newspaper.
But then, looking back,
many moments of Senior year are unique.

These are moments
when one is very proud to be part of such a school as Fairfield, and part of the tradition of those who each year attempt to present a picture
"timely" and "Timeless"
of a year in the history of an educational institution.

I would like to mention here
all those who played starring and supporting roles in the production of the 1960 Manor,
and were, each of them,
indispensable.

ATTITUDES LINK US ALL TOGETHER

When all the links of a community and its industries are locked firmly together, there remains one more tie that makes a "building" program whole. This is the attitude of the community — its citizens, its industrial and commercial employees, and its businesses.

What are these attitudes? They are the ways in which we think, speak, and most important, act toward our community, its industries and businesses, and its cultural growth. Taxes, municipal redevelopment, community services, industrial location and expansion, and our educational system all reflect these attitudes.

Therefore, enthusiastic, encouraging attitudes can become the strongest link in a community building program. With these attitudes—the most important force for progress—nothing is impossible for Greater Bridgeport.

Very Rev. James E. Fitzgerald presents 2nd Annual Festival Trophy to Joseph Monahan, Glee Club president. Looking on, wreathed in smiles, are the Rev. John Murray, moderator, and Simon Harak, director.

The Fairfield Glee Club was organized by Father Murray and Mr. Harak in 1947. From its original thirty members, it has grown to more than eighty.

The songs it chose on its way to the championship were "Russian Picnic" and "In Summer."

The first Catholic College Festival was won last year by Holy Cross College in Scranton, Pa.

FAIRFIELD, Conn., April 10—Fairfield University's Glee Club sang its way to victory this afternoon in the Second Annual Catholic Intercollegiate Glee Club Festival held here on the University campus.

Fairfield took first place in the competition finals conducted in the gymnasium, climaxing the two day competition which more than 4,000 people attended.

The festival opened yesterday in the Klein Memorial where a capacity crowd heard Fairfield, Assumption College, Holy Cross College, Providence College, St. John's University, St. Peter's College, Seton Hall University, and the University of Scranton in a "warm-up" concert.

This morning, the 450 members of the combined clubs sang Yon's "Mass of the Shepherds" at a solemn high Mass in the gymnasium. The Very Rev. James E. Fitzgerald, S.J., president of the University, offered the Mass.

About 2,200 attended the afternoon finals. Each club sang a "warm-up" number and Yon's "Ave Maria," concluding with a number of its own choice.

Judging the concert were Howard Barlow, conductor of the "Voice of Firestone"; Marshall Bartholomew, professor emeritus of music at Yale University; Frank DeVol, music director for Columbia Records; Ted H. Parker, music critic for the Hartford Courant; and Mrs. George P. Hughes, the former Elizabeth Lenox, vice-president of the Connecticut Symphony.

Ed Herlihy, radio and TV personality, was master of ceremonies.
